

Stan Miller leans down to point out a soybean sprout in a no-till field. The field was planted to corn twice before this year's crop of beans was planted.

Stan and Carol Miller (above) take a look at the cattle in their feedlot. The Millers recently finished putting in a sediment basin and water pit to help catch runoff. Also, they use the manure from the lot as fertilizer for their fields. The fields are on an intensive no-till program. This field (below) has been planted to soybeans after having grown two years of wheat.
