

Home schooling mother, Robin Somers, (right) conducts class with her three children, David, Laura and Steven, in the comfort of the family's front room. The children have been studying the Civil War. Mrs. Somers used the subject to interject biblical principles. One advantage of home schooling is the amount of time the family spends together. Mrs. Somers' husband, Steven, (far right) is able to share a midday meal with his family. Mrs. Somers tries to encourage each child's unique talents. She admires (bottom) son David's art work.
