Cook's life complete with minor mishaps

Out there in my readership lurks a group of fans who must revel in the difficulties of other cooks. If the Culinary Catastrophe Hall of Fame awards do not appear often enough, they never fail to remind me that I am neglecting my duties as a disaster reporter. So, here we are with some early 2007 entries.

NIGHT OF EXPLODING CORN: Mama's knees began to go bad fairly early in her life, so running stairs was one of my primary jobs at home. I was often sent to the windowless room downstairs where we stored our home-canned vegetables. There was a bulb with a long string for light, but you had to walk to the middle of the room to get to it; however you usually didn't "crunch" on glass shards as you did. And, what is that odd odor? The light goes on and the shriek goes up. "Mama, come quick!" And there we stood, horrified by the sight of canned corn and shattered jars all over the floor — and moldy corn stuck to the walls and dripping from the rafters and ALL the other jars of food. We learned later that corn is notorious for fermenting and exploding if canned at the wrong stage of development. We never tried to find when that was; we just never canned corn again.

THE BLOB: "Honey," he said "I know you don't usually participate in church dinners, but we really need some help with a funeral dinner tomorrow. Could you just make a quick salad?" She dug through the cupboard but it was down to scratchin's in there. At last she found two boxes of Jell-O, a can of applesauce and some redhots to create a cinnamon salad. She mixed the two packets of powder together and added the boiling water. Who knew strawberry-kiwi comes out green? Mix it with cherry and it comes out battleship grey! The addition of redhots didn't help a bit, nor did the applesauce. Too late to make anything else, she set it in the fridge in hopes it would improve overnight. It didn't. When her husband brought it back from the funeral dinner, one teaspoonful had been taken by some brave soul. "You see why I don't cook for church dinners?" she said, sweetly as she served it to him for lunch. Didn't taste bad at all but he never asked her help again.

A CHEESECAKE COM-PROMISED: LeRoy was always happy to go drive combine during harvest at the farm since he was paid with some great meals. Farm wives at harvest are busy, busy, busy and trips to town to grocery shop are worked in only when repair parts are needed and are always rushed. My sister-in-law, Barb, decided she needed a supper dessert one day but there was no time to run to town so she improvised with what was on hand. The men were delighted that evening when a family favorite, Cherry Cheesecake, was served. A few bites into it, however, and Merlin said "This doesn't taste like it usually does."

Tactfully, LeRoy said "It's these little spices in the creamy part."

Don, who was examining his serving closely, exclaimed "Those aren't spices, those are chives!"

And, finally Barb had to admit that she had used sour cream with the chives already added, rather than waste gas and time dashing to town for a plain carton. She is still teased about her Cherry Chive Cheesecake. Barb, LeRoy told me later it really wasn't that bad.

More catastrophes coming your way during 2007; out of space today.

MY MAMA SAID: Gardeners cover their mistakes with trellises; doctors put theirs under tombstones; a creative cook can always disguise an error with either mayonnaise or catsup.
