Child of the 40s

Liza Deines

Some blessings in life are taken so for granted you don't even realize they are gifts from God until the later years of your existence. I would like my readers to meet some of my blessings — my June-born siblings, Roger and Ann. Rog was born on June 14 and was convinced for years he was the reason they hung the flags that day. Ann was born June 27. Mama and Dad had a boy and a girl, the perfect family.

I happened along years later in December to everyone's absolute surprise and some dismay. Ann, at the age of fifteen, was embarrassed no end that I was expected. Women of forty just weren't supposed to still be having babies! Roger, on the other hand, was eleven and was eager to see the new baby, until my squalling arrival interfered with his meals and sleep. Annie and Ogie were my first words according to our mother.

Sister Memory Files: Giggling with Ann and her friend Margery Jean; stringing dyed macaroni rings to make a necklace; handmade dollie clothes; innumerable bedtime stories; how I cried the day she left to go away to business school far, far away; packages in the mail with new hair ribbons and barrettes to match; hand-me-downs for my dress-up box. In later years Ann did all the flowers for my wedding, sent years and years of wonderful gifts to my family, spent precious vacation time shopping with me and found me a goofy birthday card without fail. So many, many recollections of happy times, long phone calls and the security of knowing she was always there for me. Ann does volunteer work in her retirement and travels extensively now so our times together are short but treasured.

Memories of a Brother: Teasing, grinning and laughing both at and with me; going to the carnival where he took me on every ride, (but not to the wrestling or hoochie koochie tents); getting the first ride in his first car; the day he killed a bullsnake on the back stoop while Mama and I squealed; watching him and his buddy Jerry set off bags and bags of fireworks in the rain so I could see them from the bay window; teaching me the proper way to drink out of a pop bottle; his wonderful cartoons and drawings that just flowed from talented fingers. Mama had one of his charcoals of an Indian chief framed and hung in our living room. It was such an integral part of my childhood years that I could hardly believe it when we lost it in the tornado. I miss it still. Roger drives the public transportation bus in WaKeeney these days — still always ready with a smile, a joke, a helping hand.

A Family Archive Memory: A joint birthday party was held for Ann and Roger when they were very young. Neighbor children and several cousins were invited. Mama had scrubbed out Roger's little red wagon and lined it with cardboard encased in a fresh pillow slip. On this base she placed two large, flat chocolate cakes slathered with fluffy white frosting and artistically decorated with red hots. Not only was the cake a rare treat, but candy of any kind was pretty scarce in the 1930s so all the children were eager to dig in. Mama counted and painstakingly cut so each child got the same number of the tiny red treats. Roger ate his right up but Ann picked hers off to save for last. Cousin Bob, seeing the little heap at the side of her plate, exclaimed, "Oh Ann! Don't you like red hots?" And he picked them all up and gobbled them down in one bite. They say Ann's shriek of dismay was heard throughout Graham County and still echoes down the years.

It is my hope that all my readers have positive and happy relationships with brothers and sisters. If not, mend those family fences before it's too late. We were placed in families for a reason, y'know.

Oh, and one quick tip — never save the red hots for last!

HANSEN MUSEUM

By SHIRLEY HENRICKSON

The Dane G. Hansen Memorial Museum takes pride in bringing to Logan the exhibit "Married to Adventure", photographs from the travels of Martin and Osa Johnson. Martin and Osa Johnson produced dozens of short lecture films and commercial movies which appealed to audiences in the U.S. and overseas. Upon returning from their latest safari, the Johnsons would initially develop a silent film for use in lecture programs. While writing and lecturing, the Johnsons also worked on a commercial movie designed for mainstream studio release. For example, their 1933-1934 "Flying Safari" was covered by the 1934 lecture film "Wings Over Africa" and the popular 1935 commercial movie "Baboona". Often, by the time the Hollywood movie was released Martin and Osa were already packed and ready to embark on their next expedition.

People remember Martin and Osa Johnson most for their movies of Africa, Borneo and the South Seas. Although this work may represent an outmoded genre of travel-adventure films, the Johnson's legacy, captured in thousands of photographs, hundreds of cans of motion picture film footage, and numerous books and articles, remains an invaluable contribution to our knowledge of
