Liza's perils of pastry

The production of a respectable pastry seems to be a bugaboo for many a housewife. For years I thought I was the only cook in the world that couldn't roll out a piecrust in the blink of an eye. It was such a comfort to me when I found the Poor Pitiful Pastry Support Group where we could commiserate together about our failures as pie bakers.

Oh, the terrible tales told in the group could curl your hair. There was the new bride who got so infuriated trying to roll out her first pie crust that she balled up the whole mess and threw it at the kitchen wall, where it left a large grease mark that, to this day, still bleeds through any wallpaper applied over it. Then we heard from a young woman who was learning to bake from a step-bystep cookbook. Properly blended pastry texture was described as half pea-size nuggets and half of an hour separating out the bits to helped me out a bit.

Cook's Corner Liza Deines

see if she had exactly half and half before she felt secure enough to proceed with adding the ice water. And, my mother claims that her brother fetched the butcher knife to enable him to cut through her first pie shell My crusts, on the other hand, were never tough they were crumbles.

At one time I was a member of the MidCentury Study Club. Their expertise at pies is well-known around Norton because of Pie and Coffee Day, their annual fund raiser. To say I did not fit well into this group of pastry perfectionists would be an understatement. A pie coarse cornmeal. She spent most crust recipe from a good friend

LYNN NELSON'S "CAN'T MESS IT UP" PIE CRUST

Three cups flour

One and one-fourth cups solid shortening (I used Crisco)

Five tablespoons water One well beaten egg

Two teaspoons salt

One tablespoon vinegar

Cut the solid shortening into flour and salt using a pastry blender or two knives. Stir beaten egg into water and vinegar and pour into the first mixture all at once. Use a fork to blend together. Make into a ball and chill for 15 minutes. Roll out quickly while still cold. Keeps in the refrigerator (in plastic wrap) for 3 or 4 days. Particularly good for one crust cream pies since it stays crisp.

I also tried the following recipe with reasonably good results. The wax paper roll out procedure helped a lot with getting the crust where it was going before it collapsed. No lard or solid shortening in this one, so I used canola oil.

OIL PASTRY

Two cups flour

Half a cup of vegetable oil (do not use olive oil)

One teaspoon salt

One quarter cup milk

Mix the milk and oil and stir into the flour and salt. Divide into two balls. Roll out between squares of wax paper. Peel top paper off and pick up crust on the bottom paper, place into pie plate, peel off paper. Gentle it into the pan. Add filling, roll out second ball and use same procedure to place crust over filling. Seal edges, trim excess. cut vent slits.

When all else failed and I absolutely had to provide a pie for something, here's the one I used.

CHEATER'S COCONUT MACAROON PIE Four eggs, beaten well with the following:

One and a half cups sugar

Half a cup of flour

One quarter cup melted butter

Two cups whole milk One teaspoon real vanilla extract

One and a half cups angel flake coconut (not shredded) placed in bottom of a greased pie plate (glass works best) Pour the beaten mixture over it, bake at 350° for 45 minutes.
