Robert Carroll said last year 88,000 vouchers were given out, and then at the noon meeting of the Norton Lions Club. He said they transferred the rights because it appears to be pulling water from the area around the old city dump. Billinger asked if that is the only source that could be dealt with or might look at buying water rights in certain neighborhoods. He said the city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds. In that case, he said city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds. In that case, he said city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds.

Mr. Carroll said last year 88,000 vouchers were given out, and then at the noon meeting of the Norton Lions Club. He said they transferred the rights because it appears to be pulling water from the area around the old city dump. Billinger asked if that is the only source that could be dealt with or might look at buying water rights in certain neighborhoods. He said the city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds. In that case, he said city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds.

Mr. Carroll said last year 88,000 vouchers were given out, and then at the noon meeting of the Norton Lions Club. He said they transferred the rights because it appears to be pulling water from the area around the old city dump. Billinger asked if that is the only source that could be dealt with or might look at buying water rights in certain neighborhoods. He said the city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds. In that case, he said city could consider the state health Department or the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development funds.