CORRECTION

In the July 15 edition of The Norton Telegram, in a story about the Norton Idol Contest, it was reported that the value of the Norton Idol Workshop was almost $1,000. The story should have said that the total value of the first place winner's package was almost $1,000. Part of the winner's package is free admission to the workshop.

The workshop, which will be presented the day after the contest, is geared to helping budding artists improve their stage presence and performance.

The workshop will be taught by producer and talent coach, Mark Johnson. It is open to anyone and costs $20. Each participant will receive a gift certificate towards the purchase price of his latest book, "How To Be a Great Entertainer".

The Norton Idol Contest is sponsored by area businesses and coordinated by Norton Farm Bureau Association. This was a reporter's error.
