Potlucks save time, money for hosts

Offering to host a wintertime gathering can be a gracious gesture. But, doing so doesn't always require a host to buy or prepare all of the food to serve, a Kansas State University specialist said. Hosting a potluck can share the responsibility — plus save the host's time and money, said Sandy Procter,

K-State Research and Extension nutrition educator. The host's asking for volunteers and/or making assignments can ensure a balanced menu, she said. If guests will be traveling a distance, however, the safest and easiest course for them may be to bring nonperishable foods such as pickles, olives or spiced apples/peaches for the relish tray, or contribute to the cost of beverages. Encouraging guests to bring a wintertime family favorite to the potluck can sometimes add an international flavor to the menu, said Procter, who is a registered dietitian and Kansas' coordinator for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program.

"Sharing the responsibility also provides an opportunity for others to take pride in their contribution to a successful event," she said. More ideas on managing food, nutrition and health are available at county and district K-State Research and Extension offices and on the Kansas Extension Web sites at www.oznet.ksu.edu/humannutrition/ and www.oznet.ksu.edu/foodsafety.
