

And the winner is . . .

Award

(Continued from Page 1) he said. Mann said it is more amazing that the school has won the award for the last three years. "It's telling us we're doing a good job in providing a quality education to our kids," said Eisenhower Elementary School Principal Corey Roy. Roy said the school is getting recognized for a job well done, but the community should get recognition as well. "This is a reflection on the whole district and a real plus for the community," he said. Roy said it shows everyone, parents, teachers and the school board, is working together for students. At the assembly, Roy thanked the school board for their support. "The support of our school board allows our staff to do a good job," he said. Mann told students Norton does things the best they can, saying athletes play sports hard, musicians practice hard and students take tests seriously. "We do things the best we can in Norton. Everyone in here has the responsibility to do the best you can," he said. Eisenhower was one of 42 Kansas Elementary Schools to receive the award.
