

Health

(Continued from Page 1) it occurs," she said. She said it's early to tell exactly what effect the bill will have. "We don't know," she said. Norton County Hospital Director Rich Miller agreed that it is too early to know what the bill will do to health care. "A form of health care reform is needed, but how it arrived raises a lot of skepticism and questions," he said. Miller said there are some positive things in the bill, such as coverage for the uninsured. "It's the beginning of getting coverage for more people. We have seen our uninsured numbers go up," he said. Miller's concern is the price.

"It has quite an expensive price tag. I think we're all concerned about the politics," he said. According to Miller, the expansion of Medicaid is good, but he is concerned about how it will be funded.

On Jan. 1, Medicaid funding was reduced by 10 percent. "In the 2010 fiscal year, it will impact us by $70,000 in Medicaid funding," he said. Miller said Norton County Hospital has an open-door policy when it comes to treating uninsured people, but sometimes payment never comes. "We have to absorb that into our operating cost," he said.

Inmates

(Continued from Page 1) them," she said. Mickey said the correctional facility provides some equipment and meals, but in the financial crunch equipment has been cut back. "We're still getting a sweet deal," she said. "It's a great program. We love it, and we don't want to lose it," she said. "It's been a mutually beneficial program," said Norton Correctional Facility Warden Jay

Shelton. Mickey said it takes a lot of planning to keep projects planned for the inmates year-round. She coordinates ahead of time between the city and county needs. "We want them working, not sitting idle," she said. Mickey said there were growing pains in the beginning, but the crew has been an asset to the community. "It was a learning process. There is nothing we would change now," she said.

"I think we've missed out on a great opportunity here," Shelton said. "We have had to fight for it. It ended up ok, but it was tough," Mickey said. The mayor offered her support to Norton as the meeting was wrapping up. "If I can help, I will certainly give you all the support I can," she said. At the end of the meeting, Steve Cole, parks supervisor, asked Mickey how she would feel if an inmate had escaped from a work crew, attacked someone and stole a vehicle. Mickey said she couldn't answer the question because they had never had an incident. She left the meeting, and the finance committee discussed the issue with Cole. Cole said he has worked with inmates in the past and had problems with them such as work not getting done or parks employees having to re-do work because they had not done it correctly.

"I didn't have the luck with them this lady did," he said. "I'm not saying your concern isn't valid," Leroux replied. Cole said his main concerns are safety of his employees as well as being displaced by the inmates. He said they do the same work the parks employees do. "We're not going to replace a city crew. We're looking to help get things done," said councilman Toby Kuhn. The committee discussed the options for the crew.

Lawson said he thinks two things are needed for the crew to be successful: a full time guard and a place the crew can call home. They discussed work for the inmates. Lawson said he would look at it as another department and would be able to coordinate their work during the weekly meeting. "I think this will work, but we need to get it off on the right foot," he said.
