Fallen Angel food cake solutions

Angel food cake is a low-calorie dessert, yet even veteran cake makers can have an occasional - and unexpected - disappointment.

What happens, for example, when an angel food cake tests done, is removed from the oven, inverted to cool, but, while cooling, falls out of the pan and onto the counter?

Though not as attractive, if the cake is done, it will likely be edible.

Home ed Tranda Watts, Extension specialist

As a fan of angel and other foam cakes, we know that the baking failure is most probably caused by one or more of four factors:

- Use of a non-stick or greased tube pan. (Tip: Reserve a tube or angel food cake pan strictly for foam cakes.)
- Under baking. (Tip: Use an oven thermometer to verify oven temperature. Follow recipe directions as to baking time and testing for done-ness.)
- If using a two-piece cake pan, accidentally pressing on the pan bottom when removing the cake from the oven or inverting it to cool may cause the cake to shift or dislodge from the pan.

• If it is a made-from-scratch cake, check the recipe.

Adding too much sugar will add moisture and may make the cake fall.

If you want more information about food and food safety it is available at your local K-State Research and Extension Office, or you may e-mail Tranda Watts at twatts@ksu.edu.

The Dane G. Hansen Scholarship article that ran on April 20 in the Norton Telegram, inadvertently omitted the following information:

She will be attending Barton County Community College in Great Bend where she will be in the Medical Lab Tech program.

She will be cheering at Barton as well.

Norton Bridge leaders hang on for round two

By Jake Durham

There was a whole lot of shaking going on in Thursday night's second round of the Norton National Bridge Tournament as teams were bent on "movin-on-up". With only one more round to go, it seemed only logical to run some risks and position themselves for the big push in the third and final round. How did it go, depends on who you ask.

The team of Bob Jones and

Carla Latimer, leaders after round one still prevailed at the top of the leader board and stretched their lead from 1330 points to 2050 but barely breathing room as a host of would be winners were closing the gap. The team of Myron Veh and Jerry Moritz moved from fourth to second place, Weldon Brooks and Norman Nelson hit a slight bump as they went from second to third place but are only 250 points out of second. Defending Champions of last year's tournament, Mary Jane Wahlmeier and Jackie Porter leaped from ninth place after round one to fourth place and rounding out the top five with a two way tie were the teams of Dwaine Stapp and Charlotte Mients and the team of Jack Graham and David Graham.

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton reports that the "Brits" are having a companion tournament in Piccadilly Square and that the Armed Forces Radio Network as well as CNN and Fox News will air the third and final round next Thursday.

The team of Dorothy Avery and Marie Moritz were Slam Prize winners of the second round. The team of Mary Lou and Norma Archibald substituted for the team of Richard and Marcia Wiltfong, Marie Moritz substituted for Ruth Durham and Ted Sanko substituted for Jake Durham.

FYI

Duplicate bridge had 4 tables on April 28: 1st Mary Jane Wahlmeier; 2nd Norman Walter and Claudia Bridges; 3rd Jack Graham and Dave Graham.
