Logan Artist exhibits art

By Beverly Kindler
Special to The Telegram

Staci Hartman, Logan, is presenting an exhibit of oils and pastels in the Art Gallery at the Norton Public Library. She enjoys painting the beauty that surrounds us in North Central Kansas and especially the hidden wonders off the beaten path of a country road. Staci considers herself a landscape artist but also enjoys painting other subject matter. The mediums she uses include oils and pastels. In her exhibit, she has paintings featuring animals, seascapes, buildings and still life as well as landscapes.

Staci has studied with her mother, Betty Baird, and other exceptional artists from the nation including Kaye Franklin, Don Finkeldei, David Volbracht, Barbara Schaeffner and Julia McKee. She is looking forward to working under Susan Blackwood and Howard Friedland, Chicago and New York natives in June of this year.

Staci can be found at Skylight Studio and Gallery in Logan. Her exhibit of paintings will be on display through May and June at the Norton Public Library.

Not just books anymore

Again this year the Norton Public Library has received many wonderful donations and memorials to purchase books, books on CDs and DVDs.

We appreciate the continued support of the community.

A collection of music CDs has been started at the library. Donations for this collection are welcomed as well.

The music CDs can be checked out for two weeks at a time.

The computer stations at the library are used many times throughout the day. Because of a grant from the Dane Hansen Foundation we now have more computers available for the public to use.

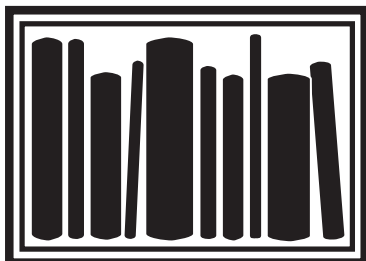

Don't forget magazines are available for check out. The library has 42 magazine titles to choose from. We also have five newspaper subscriptions.

Chess Club will start again soon. A chess tournament is also being planned at the Norton Public Library for this summer.

Some of our chess club members attended a chess tournament in Hays in January.

Grilling vegetables is easy

Home ed

Watts,

Adding vegetables to the grill is one way to keep heat out of the kitchen. Doing so also allows the cook to be outside with family and friends.

Fresh asparagus, mushrooms, bell peppers, tomatoes, onions, squash, eggplant and corn-on-the-cob are good candidates for the grill.

Grilling vegetables is an easy way to bring out natural flavors. Here are some simple tips for cooking vegetables safely and easily on the grill:

- Start with a clean grill.
- Scrub vegetables before cutting or slicing them uniformly. Pieces should be large enough so they won't fall through the grill, and similar in size, so that all the vegetables will cook in about the same amount of time.

- Pre-soak vegetables in cold water for 10-15 minutes before grilling to help retain moisture, and/or brush the surface of vegetables lightly with olive oil (before grilling) to help seal in moisture, protect skin and add sheen.
- Use tongs or spatula, rather than a fork, which can pierce the vegetable and allow juices to escape, to turn vegetables. Utensils used to grill vegetables should be reserved for that purpose and not used to turn other raw or cooked foods.

- If using a foil packet to grill vegetables, use heavy duty foil or a double layer of a lighter weight foil or a grill pan.
- Place vegetables to the side of the grill - not over direct heat. Most will be tender and lightly browned in 12-15 minutes.

If a marinade is preferred, try blending one-half cup of olive oil with one-fourth cup of red wine vinegar. If marinating kabobs, thread the meat and prepared vegetables on skewers before brushing with marinade; allow marinated kabobs to stand 15 minutes before grilling.

If meats and vegetables are to be grilled separately, cover and marinate separately in the refrigerator; marinade used on raw foods should be discarded, rather than eaten.

Oil-based salad dressings (such as an Italian-flavored dressing) can be used as a marinade. Be creative: Wrap a steak or chop in a strip of zucchini, rather than strip of bacon, or add grilled asparagus to a summer soup or veggie pizza.
