Picnic safety to stay well

Not feeling well after eating an egg, chicken, tuna or ham salad sandwich at the picnic?

Many people may think first of mayonnaise as the offending food, but the creamy sandwich/salad dressing is typically made with vinegar or lemon juice, which are both acidic ingredients that deter bacterial growth.

The more likely culprit, particularly in hot weather, is the meat, poultry, eggs or fish in a salad that has been left unrefrigerated.

A two-hour rule before discarding, rather than eating, perishable foods allowed to stand at room temperature is suggested.

On hot days where the temperature is 90 degrees F or above, perishable food should be discarded after one hour without refrigeration.

Summer heat and humidity can encourage bacterial growth on food.

Here are 12 tips to keep food safe at picnics and parties:

Wash hands before and after handling raw or cooked foods. If no water is available, use towelettes or a hand sanitizer.

Plan quantities of perishable food for expected guests to minimize leftovers that could spoil.

Use separate coolers for raw foods; cooked foods; and beverages.

Use plenty of ice or freezer packs. A full cooler will typically hold its temperature better than one that is not full.

Pack coolers with perishable foods shortly before leaving for the picnic.

Transport coolers in the air-conditioned passenger area, rather than the trunk or truck bed.

Keep coolers out of direct sunlight, covered with a blanket.

Use separate utensils, plates and platters for raw foods and cooked foods.

Pack a food thermometer, and test meats and poultry for doneness: hamburgers should be cooked to 160 degrees F; steaks or roasts to 145 degrees for medium rare or 160 degrees F for medium;

165 degrees is recommended for poultry, and fish should flake with a fork.

Wash fresh fruits and vegetables under cool running water before eating them.

Wash melon skins under cool running water before slicing it so as not to transfer naturally occurring bacteria from the soil that may be on a melon grown on a vine and touching the ground.

Keep children and pets away from a hot grill.

Place the grill away from flammable materials, including buildings or a tent.
