Well, shoot," Mama said as she read the letter she had opened so eagerly just moments ago. I knew right then something must be wrong because Mama didn't use slang very often and especially not "shoot." When I had arrived home with the mail after school she had been all smiles to see that letter from her sister. "Trouble?" I asked.

A good start

Oh, not really," she said. "It's just that with Ann in Louisiana, Roger and Betty living in Denver, and Jack and Mabel visiting in Idaho until Christmas, I was counting on Florence and Jim for Thanksgiving dinner and now they can't come either. I guess it'll be just the three of us." Mama always looked forward to a table full of family for holidays, so even as a thoughtless teenager, I realized she was really disappointed.

We three decided on a favorite menu, meatloaf and acorn squash, with a mincemeat pie to make it seem like a celebration of sorts. On Wednesday Mama made a couple of meatloaves, planning to eat one and freeze one, as we customarily did, and baked the pie. No early rising on Thanksgiving morning to get the bird in the oven would not be such a bad thing.

Holiday morning dawned crisp and clear. Dad went out to putter in the yard while lunch baked. Pretty soon he was back in. "Is that meatloaf big enough for one more? I just invited old Mr. Brandenburg for dinner his kids are all down with the flu so they aren't coming and they were bringing his dinner."

Sure," Mama said. "Hmmmm. . ." She went to the phone and called her friend Carrie from up the block. "Uh huh, uh huh . . . no, I won't hear of it," I heard her say. "You just come right down, we have plenty." She came into the kitchen, smiling. Put another leaf in the table, honey," she said. "Carrie was planning on a turkey TV dinner so I insisted she come down."

Roll Kid Liza Deines She slid the second meatloaf into the oven beside the first and began cutting more acorn squash. "I believe I'll whip up a batch of cornbread," she said thoughtfully, pulling out her blue mixing bowl.

We could make cinnamon apples," I suggested and ran downstairs to fetch canned apples. And picked up beet pickles and bread'n butter pickles while I was down there. "Are there any carrots? I can do carrot sticks and we can have a relish plate."

Dad came back in, sort of sheepish. "Edie, I . . .uh . . .well, I asked the priest to dinner. He was over at the church and I asked and . . .well, he's alone, too. . .and . . ." We're Presbyterian but we live across the corner from the local Catholic church.

We'll set another place," Mama assured him. Back for another table leaf, more china, more silver. "I can't believe no one asked the priest for Thanksgiving dinner," my mother said as we bustled around the kitchen. "I wonder if" and she was back to the telephone, leav-

A few calls, another leaf in the table, several more plates. We opened jars of home canned green beans, doubled the cornbread batch, put out sand plum jelly and rhubarb jam.

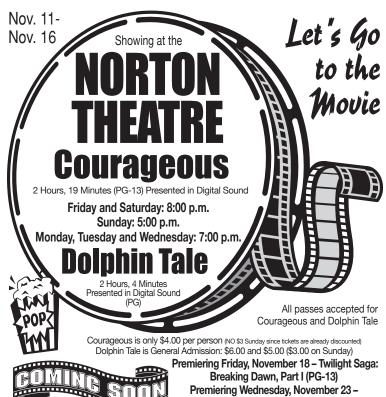

Mr. Brandenburg showed up with a large, fancy fruitcake and a gallon of ice cream, Carrie contributed zucchini nut bread from her freezer. Various other interesting spur of the moment edibles arrived with our spur of the moment guests, including our new friend, the priest, who brought three bottles of wine and a happy demeanor. My bluenose Prohibitionist father blanched, but accepted the gift with grace. We truly had a "groaning board" by the time we sat down to dinner.

Thanksgiving blessings were apparent and abundant around our table that day. The uniquely unconventional feast was delicious, and the conversation and laughter went on late into the afternoon through an impromptu dessert buffet accompanied by several pots of coffee.

And best of all, a group of lonely people weren't lonely at all that day.

Quitline is ready to help smokers Kansas Department of Health and Environment (KDHE) encourages people to quit smoking as part of the 36th American Cancer Society Great American Smokeout on Thursday, Nov. 17. To provide assistance to tobacco users who are ready to quit, the department offers cessation support and information online at www.QuitNow. net/Kansas or toll-free at 1-800-QUIT-NOW (784-8669).

"The Great American Smokeout is an excellent date to schedule your quit attempt because you will be quitting with thousands of other smokers across the country," said Robert Moser, M.D., KDHE Secretary and State Health Officer. "Quitting tobacco takes work, but creating a plan with your health care provider and getting support from the Kansas Tobacco Quitline can make the process easier and increase your chances of success. Becoming tobacco-free will improve your health and reduce your risks of cancer, heart disease, respiratory diseases and stroke."

When Kansans are ready to quit smoking, the Kansas Tobacco Quitline is ready to help. The Quitline is a service provided at no cost to Kansas participants. Enrollment is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week online or by phone. A counselor works with participants during e-mails, live chats or one-on-one phone calls to prepare for a quit date and create a plan to fight cravings and face other challenges. Follow-up e-mails, live chats or phone calls are arranged around participants' schedules. Studies have found that using a tobacco Quitline can more than double a person's chances of successfully quitting tobacco. KDHE's Tobacco Use Prevention Program manages the Kansas Tobacco Quitline and provides resources and technical assistance to community coalitions for development, enhancement and evaluation of state and local tobacco prevention initiatives. For additional information on the Kansas Tobacco Use Prevention Program visit www.kdheks.gov/tobacco. More information about the Great American Smokeout can be found at www.greatamericansmokeout.org.
