Referee a safe football party

Large gatherings can increase the chance of getting a foodborne illness. By closely refereeing the following food safety violations, you can play good defense against food-borne illness. Since you can't replay unsafe food practices, make plans now to be sure that you and other party goers return home as winners.

Illegal use of hands. Unclean hands are one of the biggest ways that bacteria are spread. Finger foods at parties put your team especially at risk. Fingerlicking guests may reach into a chip bowl or vegetable tray, spreading unwanted bacteria. Avoid penalties for illegal use of hands by providing/asking for/ using spoons, tongs, toothpicks, etc., to help avoid contaminating foods by touching them directly. Chefs and guests should wash their hands with soap and water for 20 seconds before and after handling food.

Offsides. Think of party foods as being on two different teams the uncooked against the readyto-eats. Keep each team in its own zone. Juices from uncooked raw meats contain harmful bacHome ed Tranda Watts, Extension specialist teria that can contaminate readyto-eat foods. If possible, use one cutting board for uncooked meat and poultry, and another board for cutting veggies and readyto-eat foods. If you use only one cutting board, wash it well with hot soapy water after each use and then rinse it.

Tackle temperatures. Call a "time out" and use a food thermometer to be sure that protein foods are safely cooked. The internal temperature, not meat color indicates doneness. Cook fish to 145 degrees F. Cook beef, pork, lamb and veal steaks, chops and roasts to 145 degrees F, and then allow to "rest" for three or more minutes before carving or eating. Cook ground meats to 160 degrees F. Cook all poultry to 165 degrees F.

Holding. This is one of the most likely offenses when a party lasts late into the night. Never hold hot or cold foods for more than two hours at room temperature. Serve cold foods over ice, if possible. Refrigerate or freeze leftovers promptly to block offensive bacteria from multiplying. If a perishable food has been at room temperature for more than two hours, do not eat it. When in doubt, throw it out of the game... and out of the

Ask a coach. To avoid food safety penalties, make sure you understand the rules completely. A great resource is to ask a USDA food safety coach. #### MOSEOM ansen

The Dane G. Hansen Memorial Museum presents the "35th Annual High School Art Exhibit." Art students from area schools look forward to showing off their unique artistic talents in the Hansen Museum gallery as we display their fabulous works. This year's exhibition will be Feb. 10, to March 11 and consists of a variety of art forms. Displayed by category are: watercolor and tempera, ink and scratch board, oil and acrylic, sculptural and 3-D, pencil and drawing, graphic design, jewelry, ceramics, colored pencil, printmaking, pastel, crayon, charcoal and mixed media. Students strive to create a piece of art that represents him or her as an artist, whether by personality, creativity, excellence of quality, or even their mood. Some pieces may be a whimsical creation from the artist's own imagination, while others are reproductions of a given lesson. Whatever the case may be, these students put on a show for all to see. This annual exhibition speaks highly for our area high school students and the instructors who sharpen the skills and expand the minds of our youth. Schools invited to participate in this year's exhibit are Norton, Palco, Stockton, Smith Center, Logan, Phillipsburg, Hill City, Grainfield, Ellis, Osborne, Plainville and WaKeeney.
