Ten steps to adapt to climate change in agriculture

Kansas State University professor of agronomy Chuck Rice outlined 10 steps farmers, ranchers and researchers involved in growing crops can take to adapt to climate change.

- 1) Develop crop varieties
- 2) Develop new irrigation technologies
- 3) Develop more diverse cropping systems
- 4) Improve the synchronization of planting and harvesting operations
- 5) Develop soil and crop management strategies
- 6) Increase soil carbon sequestration
- 7) Develop new technologies to increase nitrogen-use efficiencies
- 8) Develop soil erosion prevention and protection
- 9) Value agricultural commodities for water use and environmental benefits
- 10) Apply concepts of precision and target conservation.
