Bill to reform postal service

The National Newspaper Association recently greeted a comprehensive bill to reform the U.S. Postal Service as a welcome step toward new legislation.

Merle Baranczyk, NNA president and publisher of the Salida (CO) Mountain-Mail, said, NNA hoped Congress would complete work on a bill this year to avoid disruption in the mail and the threat of substantial postage rates increases.

"We appreciate the leadership of House Oversight and Government Reform Committee Chairman Darrell Issa in pulling together a legislative package that reaches out to all postal stakeholders. It is a daunting job to reform an organization with 490,000 employees and underpinning more than $1 trillion in private sector economic activity. More importantly to community newspapers, it provides the network we count on to deliver the news," Baranczyk said.

The bill would prompt numerous changes in the way U.S. Postal Service operations, including:

-Gradually end "to the door" mail delivery and replace it with cluster or curbside boxes;

-End Saturday delivery of newspapers, First-Class mail and advertising but continue package delivery and would require opening rural mailboxes for publishers' use on Saturdays;

-Prohibit no-layoff clauses in new workforce agreements and reform workers compensation rules;

-Ban Negotiated Service Agreements that would cause "unreasonable disruption of the marketplace; and

-Mandate two percent annual increases above inflation for mail currently not covering at least 90 percent of costs, such as Periodicals, but only after adjustments have been made for costs created solely by excess postal capacity.

NNA Postal Committee Chairman Max Heath said the Issa bill is a welcome catalyst toward postal reform.

"This bill is a stronger piece of legislation than the one marked up in the House last Congress, and we welcome the progress. The enormity of what must be done to save universal service and keep the Postal Service running is not lost on any of us. Everyone is going to be affected. In fact, newspapers have already been deeply affected. We are looking for legislation that helps USPS management get costs under control without destroying service, and that is a very tall order. We also recognize that Congress has to stop the federal government from spending postage money that may not have been rightly put into some of the workforce funds, and Chairman Issa is taking some steps in that direction. There are still some major concerns that our Postal Committee will be raising after we examine the bill more closely," he said.

NNA has long expressed concern about the effect upon weekend newspapers if Saturday delivery ends. In addition, it has objected to the Postal Service's direct interference in the local advertising marketplace and is a party in a federal court proceeding challenging discounted rates offered by U.S. Postal Service to Valassis, Inc.

"We appreciate Congressman Issa's recognition that the Negotiated Service Agreement can be a disruption to the marketplace," Baranczyk said. "That is an important step in getting to fairness while also permitting the Postal Service to support new business lines. I think we will have more work ahead of us in this area before we arrive at rules we consider fair. We are gratified to have had a role in shaping this bill so far, including the new mailbox access. Our board is looking forward to productive conversations with Congressional leadership this year. This is the time to get a law passed."

More information on the legislation will be available in the August Publishers' Auxiliary.

$100,000 to fund nursing teachers

The Dane G. Hansen Foundation recently notified Colby Community College that they will honor two nurses as "Instructors of Excellence" by contributing $100,000 to fund their salaries for the 2013-14 school year.

"The two recipients selected for this honor are Jennifer Landis, a nursing instructor at the WaKeeney campus; and Gwen Loyd, Norton nursing instructor," said President Steve Vacik. "It is truly an honor because the Hansen Foundation has given this money in support of excellent instruction. Both Jennifer and Gwen are outstanding examples of the quality nursing instructors at CCC."

Colby Community College has three locations that offer nursing classes. The Colby campus includes day practical nursing and both day and evening registered nursing programs. The Norton campus also offers day and evening classes for practical and registered nursing students. The WaKeeney program which began last year also offers day and evening classes for students.

"The money received from the Hansen Foundation will pay the salaries of two of our best nurses," said Dr. Vacik. "This will allow the college to utilize the payroll savings to replenish the College reserve fund."

In a report prepared by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, the Health Resources and Services Administration reports that by 2020, without aggressive intervention, the US nursing supply will fall 36 percent below requirements, a shortage of more than a million registered nurses nationwide. Although projections differ about how many Kansas RNs will be needed to address future needs, there is much concern expressed in regard to a steadily worsening RN shortage.

Both nationally and in Kansas, a growing population and changing demographics are impacting access to nursing care. Kansas population is projected to grow an estimated 12 percent between 2000 and 2020 (2.7 million to 3.0 million), while Kansas population age 65 and over is expected to expand by 46 percent. The growing population, and especially the population cohort age 65 and over who are most likely to have the greatest medical needs, will place increasing demands on the health care system.

In addition there are bottlenecks to the production of new nurses. There are not enough faculty members to teach RN students and fewer nursing educational slots available than needed to educate the volume of nursing applicants.

"It is a priority at Colby Community College to train as many nursing students as possible in our service area," said Dr. Vacik. "We realize many of our students are place-bound and not able to travel to Colby on a daily basis. To meet the demand, Colby began the program in Norton several years ago and started the nursing programs in WaKeeney last year. Because nursing is a costly program, this gift from the Hansen Foundation is especially helpful allowing us to deliver programs to other towns in our service area."
