During the time the three stood watch over the Sharp home, several trips were made back to Norton and after the new public library had been built Sue mentioned how beautiful the three would look on the lawn in front of the library. Bill agreed full-heartedly but it was only discussed a few times. After Bill's passing in February of 2008, Sue continued to live in their home but has recently moved to a smaller place and hated to just leave the statues there and that is when she contacted daughter in law, Lida Sharp. "Lida gets credit for lining it all up, she talked to the library board and got the ball rolling. She and her husband Jim also donated the lighting and cameras. Sue said. Once the plans were made Mick and Colette Miller drove to Brownsville along with Dave

Gilgenbach to bring them to Norton. Mick coordinated the moving of the statues to the truck owned and driven by Gilgenbach. Keep in mind, this is no small task. "And I couldn't have done it without them," she stated

As Gilgenbach drove the statues back to Norton, he was stopped by highway patrol, not because he was doing anything wrong but because the officer knew what they were and wanted pictures of them. A while later down the road, he was stopped again by another highway patrol officer for the same reason. "Needless to say, they caused quite a stir," Sue said.

Once back in Norton, Roger and Linda Fuller of Rawhide Ironworks completely refurbished the statues, taking them back down to the original bronze and re-did them. Thanks to Mick and Colette Miller, on Friday, September 6 they were put on concrete platforms that had been poured for them by the City of Norton and anchored to the ground. Sprinklers had to be moved, lighting put in place as well as cameras. The only thing left to do is the dedication which will take place on October 22 at 5:30 p.m.

"I am really looking forward to coming up for the dedication and I need to thank my entire family for bringing this to reality, I know Bill is just setting up there saying..."Fantastic!" I donated them in his name and I really hope that Norton appreciates them and knows how much Bill loved Norton. They are works of art, not toys or jungle gyms so I pray that parents will keep their children from playing on them and teach them to appreciate them for the beautiful works of art that they are," said Sue.

Mick Miller and David Brehmer are seen here setting the "Wicked Pony" statue at the Norton Library last Friday. This is one of three Fredrick Remington statues donated to the Library board by Sue Sharp in memory of her late husband Bill Sharp.
