When 80 lbs of nitrogen was applied in early spring, the yield was 91 bushels per acre. In contrast, 80 pounds of nitrogen applied at jointing was 68 pounds per acre and at flag leaf was 54 bushels per acre. The yield where there was no nitrogen applied was 46 bushels per acre. The treatment of 80 pounds per acre nitrogen resulted in wheat yields of about 90 bushels per acre, whether it was applied all in the fall, split between fall and early spring, or all in early spring. In each of these years, there was enough moisture after the early spring applications to move the nitrogen into the root zone of wheat. The wheat in these tests was not severely deficient in nitrogen at the time of the applications made at jointing or flag leaf. If that had been the case, there could have been more of a yield benefit from the flag leaf application of nitrogen. A sheet with the full results from this study will be available in the extension office later this week. It addresses some of the additional concerns with topdressing wheat this year.

Producers who were planning to topdress nitrogen on their wheat this spring may have to wait longer than they'd like for soils to dry out enough to make the application. This could mean that the nitrogen will go on later than usual. How late can producers topdress their wheat and still get a yield benefit? In almost all situations, nitrogen has to be in the root zone of wheat by the jointing stage to have a significant effect on yields. After that stage of growth, additional nitrogen generally has less yield benefit. Nitrogen that is surface-applied just prior to or at jointing has less chance of moving into the root zone, unless we have timely rains. In addition, the amount of yield benefit will be dependent on the nitrogen that is already present in the soil.

A study conducted at the North Central Experiment Field in Belleville demonstrates a typical response to nitrogen timing. The study had broadcast nitrogen applied in the fall, early spring, at jointing, at flag leaf, and a few split applications.

Extension Notes

Improving health and fitness need not be costly or even particularly time consuming, said Mike Bradshaw, Kansas State University Research and Extension health and safety specialist, who is preparing to launch Extension's 2007 Walk Kansas Fitness Challenge March 11. The eight-week fitness program attracted more than 20,000 participants last year, he said.

The program's low cost, $5, makes it appealing. The team concept, with six team members logging miles to equal the distance across Kansas (423 miles, east to west), allows each team member to accomplish something most could not accomplish alone. Mr. Bradshaw recommends a comfortable pair of walking shoes, and added that participants can typically improve health and fitness without ever leaving their own neighborhood.

"Exercising with others also can add a social aspect while also improving health." The program has been popular with family, friends and co-workers who make up a team. Extension offices also can match interested persons to a team needing a member or two, Bradshaw said. Walk Kansas was introduced as a walking program and has since grown to include 15 minutes of comparable aerobic exercise. Bicycling, weight training, swimming, running or team sports such as basketball, volleyball, racquetball or soccer, can count as a mile. About 90 percent of Walk Kansas teams cover the distance across the state, he said. Participants report benefits from physical activity such as an increase in energy, happier outlook, stress reduction, more restful sleep, lower blood pressure, and/or either a weight loss or easier time maintaining their weight. For more information on registration and local program dates and events, contact the Cheyenne County Extension office at 785-332-3171.

Writing workshops to be held at college

Two published authors will present four writing workshops at the Burlington branch of Morgan Community College in Burlington, Colo.: Lucille Rossbach and Su Wright.

Lucille Rossbach of St. Francis, retired English teacher, had some of her Idalia classes write the popular Gust of Dusts I, II, and III series about the heritage of the Idalia area. She now teaches part time for Colby Community College in Bird City and Morgan Community College in Burlington. She has been published in the journals of the National Council of the Teachers of English and the Bread Loaf School of English, and she has been featured in the Foxfire publications out of Rabun County, Ga.

Her 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. (with a one-hour break for lunch/writing) Saturday workshop topics will be Writing and Publishing Memoirs on March 3 and Self Expression through Writing on March 10.

In Writing and Publishing Memoirs, participants will: become acquainted with various techniques for recording memoirs, learn how to get started and keep going, learn how to employ some effective writing techniques, and be introduced to various options for publishing. Each participant is urged to bring an action photograph of himself or herself, or of some family member(s), and any journaling he or she may have done. In Self Expression through Writing, participants will have opportunity to explore various approaches to inspire creativity for written expression, via prose or poetry. They will also be introduced to some techniques for energizing and adding interest to their writing.

Su Wright of Burlington is a freelance travel writer, who will teach a class on Writing Press Releases from 2 to 4 p.m., and Writing the Magazine Article from 5:30-7:30 p.m. on Tuesdays beginning Feb. 27 through March 27.

Writing Press Releases and Press Kits - Whether you are helping your favorite nonprofit or wanting to expand your writing opportunities, this course will lead you step-by-step in the writing of a press release and the preparation of a press kit. Homework assignments reinforce class work.

Writing the Magazine Article - Learn the steps to write a successful magazine article: how to find and develop a salable idea, how to query publications, how to outline the article, how to write a lead and conclusion. Also learn all about interview steps, revising, and marketing the finished article. By the last session, the student should have a draft of an article for critique by the instructor. Feedback is given through homework assignments throughout the sessions.

Anyone interested in any of these workshops can register by calling the Morgan Community College Burlington Center (719-346-9300) or stopping by the new Community and Education Center in Burlington at 340 S. 14th Street. Pre-registration is encouraged so the authors can prepare materials for the workshops.
