Former St. Francis resident earns professional award

Former St. Francis resident, Jeremy Busby, recently received the Early Career Award for Engineering Accomplishment, given by UT-Battelle and Oak Ridge National Lab. He is a scientist in the Materials Science and Technology Division.

Mr. Busby was given the award for excellence in engineering materials research leading to timely identification of irradiation-induced segregation and phase instabilities in candidate structural refractory alloys for critical application to the Department of Energy Space Reactor Program, and to development of high-performance cast stainless steels for critical application in ITER.

ITER is a joint international research and development project that aims to demonstrate the scientific and technical feasibility of fusion power.

The science and technology awards recognize staff who have provided critical leadership or made significant scientific, engineering, or technical contributions in support of UT-Battelle's programmatic goals. Both individual and team contributions are recognized in this awards category.

Awards are given for pure scientific research, applied science, development of technology, engineering, or invention. Contributions worthy of recognition include research or engineering accomplishments that make a significant contribution to a mainstream activity; an invention with realized or potential value to UT-Battelle, the government, or commercial clients; or significant impact as an author of a key scientific publication, conference proceedings, or book. Awards are given for superlative accomplishments during the past year, over a number of years, or within the early years of a

Mr. Busby is a 1991 graduate of St. Francis Community High School. He is the son of Charlene and Gary Wickwar of Goodland and Doug and Trish Busby of Louisburg; and the grandson of Willard and Bonnie Busby and Charles and Dixie Curry, both of St. Francis.
