Peace program helps feed hungry children

By John Schlageck, Kansas Farm Bureau

Television, newspapers, magazines and the web are filled with images of starving children - skeleton-like figures crouched like dogs on their haunches while their mothers wail in anguish. Sometimes these pictures from such far-away places as Mozambique, Ethiopia or Angola also include children eating bread, bowls of rice and other staples that may have come from food produced on the fertile land of Kansas farmers and their counterparts across the United States.

Food aid for these hungry people started nearly 60 years ago right here in Kansas. It was named Food for Peace and this program was an outgrowth of this country's foreignaid policy.

A few years after the conclusion of World War II, the United States implemented plans to help countries devastated by the war. The Marshall Plan in Western Europe became the cornerstone of this newly emerging

While some of the funding was used for reconstruction, most was used to help feed starving people left homeless and unemployed by the war. During this same period, the United States enjoyed bumper crops and began stockpiling huge commodity surpluses.

In September 1953, Cheyenne County Farm Bureau (in northwestern Kansas) held a countywide policy development meeting. In that meeting, Peter O'Brien, a young farmer and rancher, suggested that it would make more sense to give aid in the form of food items rather than in the this period, not many have been as in Haiti and drought in Afghanistan. form of money.

Cheyenne County Farm Bureau drafted a foreign-aid resolution that called for exporting grain to other countries. The northwestern Kansas farm leaders believed that if underdeveloped countries were able to secure food - once they became more prosperous – they would become major buyers of U.S. commodities.

The Kansas farmers also saw this as a "sure-fire" method to help reduce grain inventories and realized that increased shipments of U.S. agricultural products could generate more business for American processors, packers, shippers, railroads and ocean vessels.

The county Farm Bureau resolution became a state resolution at the Kansas Farm Bureau annual meeting and later part of the official policy of the American Farm Bureau Federation at the national level. In '54, Kansas Sen. Andy Schoeppel sponsored legislation known as "Food for Peace" that passed both houses of Congress and was signed into law by Kansas' own native son, President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Since its early beginning in Cheyenne County, Kan., PL 480 has gone through many changes. Today it remains a key ingredient in our overseas plan to aid countries with food rather than money.

Using food for humanitarian relief programs helps everyone. PL 480 helps feed hungry people around the world while helping American farmers reduce surpluses.

While there have been many new laws and farm bills introduced during significant to agriculture and feeding the world's hungry people as Food for Peace. Without this humanitarian vehicle and the output of Kansas producers and their counterparts across the United States, millions of people continue to go hungry.

Each year millions of people need millions of tons of food to fill their hungry bellies. In 2008, an estimated 963 million people remained undernourished.

That same year, more than $2.8 billion was donated worldwide from U.S. aid programs to developing countries, reaching tens of millions of people. This aid is essential in emergency situations and included drought in the Horn of Africa, conflicts in Sudan and Congo, hurricanes

Approximately 43 million in 38 countries benefited from emergency food aid provided through Food for

At the same time, non-emergency programs continued to focus on increasing agricultural production and supporting programs to address health, nutrition, HIV and others aimed at investing in people. More than 7.2 million people in 28 countries benefited from USAID non-emergency food assistance.

John Schlageck is a leading commentator on agriculture and rural Kansas. Born and raised on a diversified farm in northwestern Kansas, his writing reflects a lifetime of experience, knowledge and passion.
