

IRRIGATED CORN usually stands 6-foot tall by this time of year. However, after the hail storm on Friday, the corn had been sheared off leaving the tire of the irrigation system visible. This field of corn is one of many south of St. Francis in the Lawn Ridge area that were totally destroyed by the hail.

FLOODING WAS COMMON south of St. Francis. Several of the roads were underwater. Bottom left, the hail left large holes in the siding and knocked out a window. The owner had taped up a piece of cardboard until the insurance adjuster had been around. Bottom right, PrairieLand crews were out checking for damage after the storm.

Herald staff photos by Tim Burr

