Two recertification classes to be offered

Larry Gabel, emergency medical service director, met with the Cheyenne County Commissioners on Friday to discuss the re-certifying of the county's emergency medical technicians. After much discussion and the fact that Cheyenne County is in desperate need of certified technicians, the commissioners agreed to pay Beth Gabel to teach two classes.

Many of the Cheyenne County emergency medical technicians are in need of hours to re-certify by 2003. Two years ago, the state officials agreed that technicians could re-certify every two years but they still needed to have at least 14 hours each year depending upon the level of technician. Now, there are several of the county technicians who need all 28 hours to re-certify. There were options including classes which would require the technician to pay for the training out of their own pockets. However, Mrs. Gabel, a re-certification instructor, could also teach several weekend classes which would pretty much catch most of the technicians up to re-certification.

Ambulance rates increase

The director and Janelle Bowers, bookkeeper, presented the commissioners with $1,021 in ambulance write offs which the commissioners approved.

The discussion turned to the cost of ambulance runs and operating expenses. The commissioners agreed that, if the cost was raised, it still needed to be at a level where those not having insurance could still afford the service. It was finally decided to raise the ambulance run rates 20 percent. The increase will begin Sept. 1.
