to start remodeling a building at the fairgrounds. To complete this project, a contractor has been hired but volunteer labor is needed.

The building to be remodeled is the one which, during the fair, houses all the art, craft, clothing and special 4-H project displays. This building is also rented for wedding receptions, dances and large meetoffered to help with the costs and The fair is over and now it is time possibly with the labor. However, more donations were needed and the money was a little slow coming in. Summer arrived and, with it, fair time so the project was put on hold.

Now that the fair is over, Dick Bursch, fair board president, reported that Dan Penn, Penn Building Service, is able to oversee the project but volunteers are needed to do the work.

The project will include furring out the sides with lumber, then adding insulation and covering it with sheet rock. All rooms including the kitchen and rest rooms will be completed in this manner. The sheet rock will be finished and painted.

Mr. Bursch said the project will probably not take too long if there are enough volunteers. He has called an initial meeting for 7 p.m. on Monday at the fair building.

People urged to get shot

By Karen Krien

The staff at the Cheyenne County Health Office and Clinic are busy giving flu shots.

"We believe we have enough vaccine for the residents of Cheyenne County," Susan Roelfs, county health nurse, said.

"The Cheyenne County Clinic has 800 doses and the health department has 300."

Nurse Roelfs is urging all residents to come in for their flu and pneumonia shots by Nov. 15. After that date, Nurse Roelfs will contact the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to let them know how much vaccine is left and the vaccine left will be sent to a county which did not get enough.

Richard Morrissey, interim state health director, said the Health and Environment Department was pleased with the spirit of cooperation of the state's local health department and private healthcare providers for stepping forth to share the flu

Hunters gather for Upland Classic

By Casey McCormick

On cool, clear mornings last Saturday and Sunday, hunters from several states gathered in Chevenne County for the National Upland Classic. Ringneck Country hosted the two-day competition which had 112 runs on planted quail.

Rex and Sandy Murray, owners of Ringneck Country, organized the event for hunters and dogs from Kansas, Colorado, North Dakota, Texas and Nebraska.

"The National Upland Classic continues to grow in size each year," Mrs. Murray said.

Bird planters went to the four fields to place quail before the individuals or teams headed out with their dogs. Judges followed the hunters and rated them for time, accuracy, performance and ability to make kills with a limited number of shots.

There were pointing and flushing divisions. A pointing lab division was introduced this year.

The competition was held just above the Sherman County line in Cheyenne County on K-27.

Top Winners of Each Division Open pointing: Carl Sax, Aurora,

Open flushing: Steve Young,

Pointing lab: John Lindell, Wellington, Colo.

Amateur flushing: Cate Young,

Amateur pointing: Eric Burrows, Garden City.

Pointing double: Carl Sax and Keith Bryant, Aurora.

Flushing double: Roger Barbe and Jim Bonham, Centennial, Colo.

Upcoming events for Ringneck Country are an Upland Classic to be held on December 4 and 5 and the Murrays will host the Third Annual Kansas State Pheasant Championship in February. The Murrays anticipate at least 150 two-man teams for the February contest.
