It remained unnamed until September of 1868 when the Forsythe Scouts and the Dog Soldiers met in battle. Following a vicious fight that lasted for days, the scouts were stranded on this island. They called it Beecher Island in honor of their fallen officer, Lt. Fred

On the 10th day, they were rescued by a company from the 10th Cavalry, the Buffalo Soldiers. After the rescue, it returned to being isolated but it was not forgotten.

Thirty years later, a group of the scouts returned, determined that this place and its history should be remembered. They found a piece of native stone, made an inscription on it, vowing to return again next year with as many surviving scouts as they could find. The tradition of the Beecher Island Reunion was born.

A stone monument was erected a few years later. This was the first monument.

These men felt that something more permanent should be done. They petitioned the Federal government and the state of Colorado to grant them title to the battleground. In 1905, deed to the property was given to the newly formed Beecher Island Battle Memorial Association. The states of Colorado and Kansas each provided $2,500 and a new monument was erected on the island. It was a multiple piece obelisk standing nearly 18-feet tall.

In 1935, a mighty flood roared down the Arikaree. It not only toppled the monument but washed away the island itself. Like good people everywhere, the folks at Beecher Island picked up the pieces and moved to higher ground. Unfortunately, not all the pieces of the monument could be found including the top three. A new top was made from wood, stucco and paint.

After 70 years, several patch jobs, and numerous coats of paint, this top has deteriorated.

The Beecher Board of Directors is asking for the public's help in restoring it back to near original condition. It will take $16,500 to get this task done. It will be three pieces of granite cut to original dimensions. We hope to have this completed in time for the 2006
