Veteran receives headstone

By Karen Krien

Fifty-nine years ago, Bert Pyle, WWI veteran, died and was buried in the St. Francis Cemetery. There was never a head stone for Mr. Pyle but an infant son had a small brass marker. As the years passed, grass grew over the marker and the Pyles' graves seemed to disappear.

Bert's son Bob was 8-years-old when his father died on May 10, 1947. He remembered that he was buried in the Remley plot. Bob's next visit to the cemetery was in the late 1960s and he vaguely remembered where the plot was.

Bob, who now lives in Otis, Colo., had intended to see that his father would have a permanent marker on his grave some day. In May, Bob met Ron and Dot Hill, St. Francis, in the directory building at the St. Francis Cemetery. They helped Bob locate the Remley plot of ground.

Mr. Hill, a member of the VFW Post 1528, told Bob about Howard Poulignot, who is extremely interested in veterans, burial plots and honoring all veterans, deceased or otherwise.

Mr. Poulignot, with his knowledge of computers and avid interest in genealogy, is very familiar with the procedures and forms necessary to obtain veteran markers. Armed with the needed information, Mr. Poulignot and Bob met with Jody Tubbs, Veteran's representative, filed for and received a WWI upright marble monument.

The graves of Bert and baby Pyle are not listed in the cemetery directory. However, caretaker Tony Gienger, with his spade, quickly located the remains of the marker for baby Pyle. Mr. Gienger then identified the outline of Bert's grave. Measurements were taken and the exact location where the markers should be placed were made.

When the stone arrived, a base was poured and the stone was erected. Bob had a mortuary marker made for his infant brother which was placed next to Bert's grave. Now, after 59 years, both Pyles have markers.
