Helping Kids deal with Holiday Stress

Holiday times are stressful for everyone, including children. Kids may respond to stress by acting up, or they may just withdraw for a while — here are some suggestions to help calm them down and keep them happy through the holiday season.

- De-emphasize television. Much holiday programming seems to be designed to get children all worked up about the holidays. Try to mute or turn off the commercials, and be selective about your family's holiday viewing.
- Stick to your normal family routine as much as possible. It's often hard to take time out of busy holiday preparations, but a walk, a trip to a playground or play area, or whatever else you usually do with your kids each day can be a great stress reducer.
- Include your children in holiday planning sessions, and let them know the final details well in advance. This will give them a chance to prepare themselves emotionally for the visits, dinners and other running around of the season.
