Schools can't agree on pre-season classic

MANHATTAN (AP) — Kansas State and Southern Methodist will not meet in the Black Coaches Association Classic on Aug. 25, both schools said Monday.

The schools had agreed to meet in the game in Manhattan, but both said the deal with the BCA and the Gazelle Group, the game's promoter, fell apart over the last few days.

"We are disappointed that we won't be playing in this game," said Kansas State senior associate athletic director Jim Epps. "As recently as Friday of last week, we felt we had an agreement in principle to play in the game."

Messages left with the BCA and the Gazelle Group by The Associated Press on Monday were not returned.

"We were pleased to be considered for the BCA game, but we are sorry that the final details couldn't be worked out," SMU athletic director Jim Copeland said.

"The national exposure would have been great for the program, but unfortunately, we couldn't come to a final agreement."

Kansas State was ninth in the final AP poll last season with an 11-3 record, while SMU finished 3-9.

Apparently one of the sticking points in the negotiations was television. Kansas State said the game was going to be televised regionally on Fox Sports Network.

It would have been the second straight year Kansas State played in a preseason game. Last year the Wildcats beat Iowa 27-7 in the Eddie Robinson Classic at Arrowhead Stadium.

Epps said it was unclear if Kansas State not playing in the BCA Classic was a final decision.

"Since these negotiations have been so difficult and involved," Epps said, "it is certainly in our best interests to keep all our options open should negotiations take another turn."

There will be a second BCA Classic this August, because last year's game between Virginia Tech and Georgia Tech was canceled due to lightning. The teams and date for the second BCA Classic have not been decided.

After 22 years and a Stanley Cup, Bourque to retire

DENVER (AP) — Raymond Bourque, his quest for the Stanley Cup realized, will retire at a news conference scheduled for Tuesday.

A source close to the Colorado Avalanche told The Associated Press on Monday that Bourque will announce his retirement after 22 NHL seasons.

The Avalanche scheduled a news conference for Tuesday, saying only that the star defenseman will make an announcement about his hockey career.

While the team would not reveal what Bourque, 40, planned to announce, the Denver Post said Bourque will retire, primarily for family reasons.

The highest-scoring defenseman in NHL history said previously he wants to spend more time with his family after more than two decades in the NHL. Bourque had a 22-year wait before winning the championship, the longest in NHL history.

Bourque's Boston-based agent, Steve Freyer, said Bourque had made a decision about his future, but Freyer wouldn't reveal what it was.

Bourque played for 21 seasons in Boston, but he requested a trade to a contender in March 2000 in hopes of winning an NHL title. He finally got it when the Avalanche beat the New Jersey Devils for the Stanley Cup earlier this month.

Tears streaming down his face, he hoisted the Stanley Cup on the ice at Pepsi Center, the same facility where he will make his retirement announcement on Tuesday at noon MDT.

Freyer wouldn't reveal what it was.
