Drought concerns

With the current drought, officials at Northwest Research-Extension Center, Colby, are hosting a meeting this week designed to help producers evaluate their cropping system and plan any needed changes to adapt to the conditions, said Roger Stockton, crops and soil extension specialist at the center.

The meeting is scheduled for Thursday at the Colby Quality Inn meeting room with registration beginning at 9 a.m.

"We need at least 10 people pre-registered prior to the deadline date on Wednesday at noon in order to hold this special drought response meeting," he said.

Among the specialists planning to make presentations, Stockton said, is Kent McVay, who is the state soil and water conservation specialist, who will discuss how the various crops handled the drought and heat in 2002 and what to expect in 2003.

Dale Fjell, he said, is the state row crop production specialist, and he will be providing the latest research in corn, soybeans and milo.

Dan O'Brien, the Northwest Area Agricultural economist will have the Kansas State crop budgets for the coming year and Stockton plans to talk about the latest sunflower research and wheat production, including no-till wheat research.

"All of the specialists encourage questions from producers," he said, "and we usually learn as much from the producers as they do from us."

The registration fee is $30, which includes lunch and all materials and can be paid at the door, he said, but it is imperative that producers pre-register prior to Thursday.

For questions or information on the topics, Stockton encourages people to call the Northwest Research-Extension Center at 462-6281, or you can e-mail him at rstockto@oznet.ksu.edu

Stockton said that mail inquiries can be addressed to: The Northwest Research and Extension Center, P.O. Box 786, Colby, Kan. 67701-0786 or by faxing to: (785)-462-2315.

February to usher in 'Operation Heartbeat'

By PATTY DECKER
Free Press Editor

Each year, the American Heart Association sets aside the month of February as "American Heart Month" as a time to educate people on cardiovascular disease, how to prevent it by looking at warning signs and much more, said Linda Hauder, health initiative specialist in Topeka.

In addition to the month-long campaign known this year as "Operation Heartbeat," Thomas County and other locations across the state will take part in the fund-raising event known as "Cardiac Arrest," involving local people asking for donations to further the goals of the association.

One such goal is purchasing automated external defibrillators that can save lives, she said.

Citing examples, Hauder talked about different situations involving people of all ages who would have died from a heart attack had there not been the external defibrillators readily available.

"We know that these defibrillators save lives and we are working to make sure that more Americans take action to become lifesavers and make their communities safer for everyone," she said.

External defibrillators, she said, don't replace CPR, which needs to be performed immediately after a victim collapses, but they are necessary within minutes.

"About 250,000 Americans die each year from a sudden heart attack," she said, "and only five percent of these victims survive because CPR and defibrillation usually occur too late."

Another misconception about heart attacks, she said, is that many people believe the attack will be in public and the victim a stranger.

"The truth is that 80 percent of sudden cardiac arrests happen at home, so if you administer CPR, it will likely be for a loved one," Hauder said. "Call 9-1-1 is essential, but not enough — people must take two more steps — first CPR while waiting and second is defibrillation."

More information on this year's Cardiac Arrest in Thomas County will appear in a later publication.

For other questions about American Heart Month, Hauder encourages people to either call her at (620) 285-6896 or log on to the association's website at: www.americanheart.org

Kline's newest deputy raises some eyebrows

TOPEKA (AP) — The state's new deputy attorney general for consumer protection, who participated in mass abortion protests in Wichita in 1991, said Monday he would look beyond his views on abortion in enforcing Kansas law.

Bryan Brown, 44, said he was hired by Attorney General Phill Kline because of his sense of justice and his desire to see people treated equally.

"I'm not a political hack brought in to shut down abortion in Kansas," Brown said.

Kline's office called a news conference late Monday to discuss Brown's appointment, which has drawn attention because of Brown's background in the anti-abortion movement. Kline opposes abortion and has promised to interpret the state's law more narrowly than his predecessor, Carla Stovall.

Brown was hired from the Tupelo, Miss.-based Center for Law & Policy of the American Family Association, a Christian advocacy organization. As a litigator for the past six years, Brown represented parties in state and federal cases on First Amendment issues.

Earlier this month, according to a news release on the group's Web site, Brown won a federal challenge to two Florida statutes restricting sidewalk distribution of certain kinds of literature. The case stemmed from two women's distribution of fliers critical of the Disney Corp. as they stood on a traffic island near Disneyworld.

Brown said Monday he had been arrested about a dozen times.

Might weigh passengers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some airline passengers just getting used to baggage inspections and patdowns at airports soon may have to reveal how much they weigh before boarding small commuter and regional planes.

The Federal Aviation Administration announced the temporary weigh-in policy for planes with 10 to 19 seats. This is part of a month-long survey to determine whether or not current weight estimates at various nation's airports are accurate.

The FAA also issued an order requiring inspections of elevators on all Beech 1900 series planes.

The elevator is a flap on the tail that moves up and down and causes the plane to climb or dive.

Investigators are looking at excess weight and elevator malfunction as possible contributing causes of the Jan. 8 crash of a 19-seat Beech 1900 turboprop in Charlotte, N.C. All 21 people aboard died.

Internet disruptions a shocker

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disruptions from the weekend attack on the Internet are shaking popular perceptions that vital national services, including banking operations and 911 centers, are largely immune to such attacks.

Damage in some of these areas was worse than many experts had believed possible.

President Bush's No. 2 cyber-security adviser, Howard Schmidt, acknowledged that what he called "collateral damage" stunned even the experts who have warned about uncertain effects on the nation's most important electronic systems from mass-scale Internet disruptions.

"This is one of the things we've been talking about for a long time," Schmidt said, "getting a handle on interdependencies and cascading effects."

The White House, along with Canadian defense officials confirmed that they were investigating how such an attack, which started about 12:30 a.m. EST last Saturday, could have affected ATM banking, as well as other important networks that should remain immune, or thought were immune, from traditional Internet outages.

The attack, alternately dubbed "Slammer" or "Sapphire," sought vulnerable computers to infect using a known flaw in popular database software from Microsoft Corp. called "SQL Server 2000."
