

State board at odds over revised social science standards

By JOHN MILBURN
Associated Press Writer
TOPEKA (AP)—State Board of Education members remained at odds Thursday over how much social science teachers should emphasize that Kansans live in a global society.

suggested changes from member Steve Abrams, an Arkansas City Republican. The standards committee returned Thursday with a new draft reflecting Abrams' suggestions, but other board members did not like them.

Abrams prefers a narrow approach. "I'm a citizen of the United States, a citizen of Kansas, but I'm not a citizen of the world," Abrams said Thursday.

Originally, the draft standards contained broad references about the country's place in the world. It said students should understand the governmental systems of the United States and other nations. For example, students would study the impact on America's economy by Japan's decision to stop importing U.S. beef following the nation's first confirmed case of mad cow disease.

Creekstone Farms Premium Beef LLC, which has a processing plant in Arkansas City, has wanted to test all of its cattle for the disease so that it can send beef to Japan, but its plans have been blocked by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Board member Bill Wagon, a Topeka Democrat, said as a Washburn University history professor, he knows students often lack

"It is important for us in Kansas to understand that we breathe the same air that passes through China, for Pete's sake," Wagon said.

Abrams said he never meant to imply that Kansas was or should be isolated, noting that agricultural products and airplanes are exported, while Wal-Mart sells Chinese goods.

"Obviously, we have a difference of opinion," he said. Kim Rasmussen, a consultant working with standards committee, said the panel preferred the original language because it was more closely aligned with materials now used by teachers and students and with benchmarks for determining how much material students have mastered.

In effort to reach consensus, the board on Thursday appointed Abrams and Wagon to work with the standards committee to find language that a majority of the board could accept.

Kathleen Porter-Magee, associate research director of the Thomas B. Fordham Foundation in Washington, D.C., said the changes sought by Abrams made sense, as long as the content was presented in a context of a global interdependence.

"It sounds like he is tweaking it to give the students a better understanding of where they are," she said.

This is the second time in five years that board members clashed over standards.

In 1999, conservative Republican board members, including Abrams, won approval of science standards that de-emphasized evolution—drawing international ridicule.

In the 2000 elections, a coalition of moderate Republicans and Democrats regained control and reinstated evolution as a key element of the science curriculum.

Board member Sue Gamble, a Shawnee Republican, said the dispute over social sciences standards was likely to play out in the Aug. 3 Republican primary.

Gamble said how the dispute affects the election depends on how much voters are aware of the issue.

"The gorilla is still here and it's raising its head," Gamble said, referring to the split among conservatives and moderates.

"To not acknowledge that does a disservice to the process and the students of Kansas."

But Abrams, who faces Republican Tim Aiken of Derby on Aug. 3, disagreed.

"I think this is a difference of opinion of what the history standards should entail," he said.

"I think we can come to agreement."

Examples of proposals for social science standards noted

TOPEKA (AP)—Here is an example of how various drafts of social sciences standards for Kansas schools differ. The proposed standard is for civics and government. In June, a committee of social science educators recommended to the State Board of Education that the state have the following expectation:

"The student uses a working knowledge and understanding of governmental systems of the United States and other nations with an emphasis on the U.S. Constitution, the necessity for the rule of law, the civil values of the American people and the rights, privileges and responsibilities of becoming active participants in the democratic process."

Board member Steve Abrams, of Arkansas City, suggested:

"The student uses a working knowledge and understanding of governmental systems, with an emphasis on Kansas and the United States. The student will particularly study the U.S. Constitution, the necessity for the rule of law, the civil values of the American people, and the rights, privileges and responsibilities of being citizens of the United States of America."

On Thursday, the committee proposed:

"The student uses a working knowledge and understanding of governmental systems with an emphasis on Kansas and the United States, particularly the study of the U.S. Constitution, the necessity for the rule of law, the underlying values of the American people, the rights, privileges and responsibilities of being engaged citizens of the United States of America."

Man who fled prison in 1976 is caught in Kansas

HARPER (AP)—A man living under an assumed name since he fled a Tennessee prison in 1976 is back in custody in Kansas.

Mickey Ray Frye, 53, had lived in Harper, a community of about 1,200 southwest of Wichita, off and on for 15 years. Harper County Undersheriff Mark Rine said Thursday.

"He has bounced around between Tennessee, Florida, Texas and Arkansas and finally ended up here," Rine said. "He left for Florida for a while, and has been back for about two years."

Frye was known as Mitchell

Thornton, and Rine said the fugitive told him it was a name on a driver's license he found shortly after his escape.

Frye was serving a 10-year sentence for assault with intent to rob, armed robbery and receiving stolen property. He was on an authorized furlough from the Tennessee State Penitentiary in Nashville and failed to return the day after Christmas in 1976.

Rine said Frye told him he had been with an attorney.

"They went out, had some drinks, he got drunk, and he never went back," the undersheriff said.

Rine said Harper police Sgt. Ken Blaylock got a call at home from someone who suggested he check a Web site showing escaped convicts from Tennessee.

"He saw his picture and immediately recognized him," Rine said. "He contacted us, and we started the ball rolling and got a copy of the fingerprints."

Rine said Frye was confronted Wednesday at the court house in Anthony when he came there on a civil complaint he had filed alleging that his estranged wife was driving without insurance.

Rine took him into custody and began interviewing him, showing him the picture from the Tennessee Web site.

"He at first denied it," Rine said. "Then I confronted him with the print match. He pretty much slouched, and said 'Yeah, it's been a long time.' He admitted to being Frye."
