SAINT-LARY-SOULAN, France (AP) — As Lance Armstrong prepared for what may be the hardest stage of the Tour de France, the widow of a friend and teammate killed in a crash a decade ago told him to go for the win.

That was the only thing that didn't work out for Armstrong Sunday, which he called "a perfect day." Armstrong settled for watching his most loyal teammate, genial New Yorker George Hincapie, pedal to victory high in the Pyrenees — his first-ever individual stage victory in the Tour and the first by one of Armstrong's support riders.

Armstrong solidified his overall race lead in the brutal 15th stage staying on track to retire with a seventh consecutive Tour victory next Sunday.

And, taking care of business,

"This is a dream for me," the 32year-old Hincapie said. "I'm really

The 33-year-old Armstrong called Hincapie "my biggest guy, my biggest friend on the team."

"We've been riding together since we were 17," said Armstrong, who finished seventh. "The guy is one of the best riders in cycling. Period. I'm so proud of him."

Usually, Armstrong's teammates devote themselves entirely to making sure that he wins, and have few chances for Tour glory of their own. Their only wins have been collective ones — in team time trials that Armstrong's squad won for the third consecutive time this year.

But in the sun-baked 127.7-mile trek up six mountain climbs, Hincapie joined a group of riders that broke away from the main pack, which included Armstrong.

Hincapie said he went with that group thinking that Armstrong would catch up to him later in the

But the breakaway group built a lead of more than 18 minutes. At that point, Armstrong's team manager gave Hincapie the green light to ride for himself.
