

Lifting up

RHONDA FABER/Colby Free Press

Kale Regier, a sophomore at Heartland Christian School, was one of many involved in the "See you at the Pole," event. Kale and other young people of all ages performed in several locations through out Colby including Heartland Christian School. Of the 21 students in the junior high and high School, 19 students, some with their younger siblings and parents, came together to lift up the school, one another and our country in prayer, school officials said. That's 90 percent attendance which is excellent for the junior high and high school, officials said. In the elementary, many students also came together for prayer as well. All together, approximately 60 students, parents and faculty met for prayer.

Episcopal investment panel rejects divestment

NEW YORK (AP) — An investment panel of the Episcopal Church has recommended against divesting from companies that profit from Israeli policy in the Palestinian territories.

The Social Responsibility in Investments Committee said in a report Monday that "the goal is for selected companies to change behavior resulting in a more hopeful climate for peace. If the church simply divests, nothing positive has happened."

Instead, the committee suggested that the denomination adopt a strategy of "corporate engagement," that would encourage companies to adopt practices that bring about "positive changes in Israeli government policy" towards pulling out of the territories completely, "as well as urging the Palestinian Authority to oppose violence as a means of resistance."

The Executive Council, the elected body which oversees the denomination, will take up the recommendations during a meeting that begins Friday in Las Vegas.

Several mainline Protestant churches have angered Jewish leaders by researching divestment as a way to create pressure to end Israel's presence in the territories. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has gone the furthest, naming companies it plans to target.

Israel withdrew from Gaza Strip over the summer, but retains control of the West Bank.
