Bush sends Congress $2.7 trillion spending plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is sending Congress a $2.7 trillion spending plan that provides big increases for the military and homeland security but squeezes many other government programs in an effort to get soaring deficits under control.

Bush hopes to use the election-year budget to get his domestic agenda back on track after a frustrating year in which Congress spurned his top domestic priority of overhauling Social Security in advance of the retirement of 78 million baby boomers.

The plan, for the budget year that begins next Oct. 1, seeks to address more immediate voter concerns about soaring energy and medical bills and worries about the loss of America's economic edge to global competitors such as China and India.

It also proposes to get the deficit under control by trimming $36 billion over the next five years from the government's big Medicare health program for the elderly and imposing tight controls on the budgets of many government agencies outside the Defense and Homeland Security departments.

In all, Bush targets 141 programs for elimination or sharp reductions for savings of $14.5 billion next year.

The effort allows him to meet his pledge to cut the deficit in half by the end of his term in 2009, while still preserving his other major priority: making permanent his first-term tax cuts, which are due to expire at the end of 2010.

Conservative Republicans, who have urged the president to get tougher in dealing with the deficit, expressed pleasure with his efforts to slow the growth of Medicare spending by $36 billion over the next five years.

"It is good health policy and good budget policy to try to do something about the growth of Medicare," said Senate Budget Committee Chairman Judd Gregg, R-N.H.

But Democrats said Bush was making very little progress in reducing budget deficits that have soared during his administration in large part, they contend, because of his huge tax cuts that primarily have benefited the wealthy.

Because of the huge deficits, the administration will be forced to ask Congress in coming weeks to raise the national debt limit, now at $8.18 trillion.

"The debt is exploding and the president isn't facing up to it," said Sen. Kent Conrad of North Dakota, the top Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee.

The administration has said the deficit for this year will top $400 billion, driven upward by the costs of the war in Iraq and rebuilding the hurricane-ravaged Gulf Coast.

It said last week it would submit a supplemental spending request for $18 billion for hurricane relief for the current budget year and ask Congress for $120 billion to pay for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan for the rest of this year and into 2007.

The war spending is on top of a nearly 5 percent rise in the Pentagon budget to $439.3 billion for 2007. Bush's budget would also provide about a 5 percent increase in spending at Homeland Security, not counting hurricane-recovery costs.

To achieve the goal of halving the deficit by 2009, the administration again wants to put a squeeze on the one-sixth of the budget that funds the nonsecurity operations of government — everything from running the national parks to buying paper clips.

Bush's proposed Medicare reductions are expected to draw determined opposition in Congress, which just approved a reduction of $4.7 billion in spending for Medicaid, less than half the amount sought by the administration.

Medicaid is a joint state-federal program that provides health care for the poor.
