

Kansas Wheat Days to focus on ways to control input costs

Hays is hosting the annual Wheat Day starting at 10 a.m., Wednesday, May 31, at the Kansas State University Agricultural Research Center, 1232 240 Ave.

"The program is open to the public and should be of interest to wheat producers, crop consultants, and individuals associated with agribusiness and cooperative extension," said Dusti Fritz, chief executive officer with the Kansas Wheat Commission.

Highlights during the day include a trade show of Kansas State University wheat research projects. K-State's wheat research is supported by a one-cent per bushel mill levy in Kansas and the money is administered through the Kansas Wheat Commission.

In addition, the event will give producers ways to manage the fuel and energy costs for their operations, Fritz said.

"The rising costs of fuels and fertilizer have generated a crisis in farm operations.

"Fuel costs are a major concern to producers as they approach harvest with expectations of a below-average crop," he said.

Plot tours will begin at 2 p.m. and 36 different wheat varieties from both public and private breeding programs will be on display with attributes and relative performance history described by K-State wheat breeders, Joe Martin and Allan Fritz.

"All of the currently popular wheat varieties will be seen, along with several new varieties soon to be available," Dusti Fritz said.

There is no cost for Kansas Wheat Day.

However, interested persons are requested to call the Kansas Wheat office at (866) 759-4328 to get their name on the list for an accurate lunch count.

Governor signs gun permit bill

TOPEKA (AP) — Although critical of the idea, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius signed a bill Wednesday keeping Kansans in the dark about who has a concealed gun permit.

The record-closing language was folded into a broader bill addressing various shortcomings of the concealed guns law, which takes effect July 1 after lawmakers overrode the governor's veto.

Closing records for concealed gun permit holders never received a committee hearing. Rather, it was tucked into a House-Senate conference committee report, and legislators had to accept or reject the entire package.

In criticizing the record-closing portion, Sebelius said in a statement, "I believe it should have received an open committee hearing in the Legislature. I also believe the records of licenses issued under this law should be open, like those of any other license."

But Sebelius said the bill has good parts, which led her to sign it. "Nevertheless, I believe the new concealed carry law is better with this proposal than without it. This bill will help keep guns out of the hands of those with serious mental illness and problems with substance abuse and will make the concealed carry law easier to administer," she said. "These changes will make Kansans safer."
