

Life-saving celebration

TISHA COX/Colby Free Press

Judith Edwards of the American Red Cross-Wichita, left, got ready to take a pint of blood donated by Bill Dowell of Colby, right. The event was the 125th Red Cross anniversary blood drive Wednesday at the Colby Community Building. Dowell has donated 64 pints of blood to the Red Cross. Jo Cheney, one of the organizers, said 135 pints of blood were donated by 151 people. There were also eight first-time donors.

Estate tax faces pivotal vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Asked to choose between letting the estate tax live or die, senators geared up instead to decide whether to shrink taxes on inherited estates during this election year.

GOP leaders pushed senators toward ending the tax once and for all. It disappears in 2010, under President Bush's first tax cut, but rears up again a year later.

"Dying should not be a further burdensome, expensive and complicated event because of the death tax," said Sen. John Cornyn of Texas, one of many Republicans who want to see the tax evaporate.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., indicated that he wouldn't stand in the way of senators who might try to compromise and reduce the tax, should the effort at repealing it fall short.

The test comes Thursday with a pivotal vote that could put a bill repealing the tax onto the Senate's immediate agenda. The tax's critics need 60 votes to overcome the objections of many Democrats who want to leave the tax in place and who criticize the GOP for trying to kill it.

"The Republican Senate leadership is using up our legislative calendar to try to push through legislation to assure that the very wealthiest estates will get a multi-million-dollar tax break," said Sen. Joe Lieberman, D-Conn.

According to the most recent statistics available from the Internal Revenue Service, 1.17 percent of people who died in 2002 left a taxable estate.

Sen. Jon Kyl, R-Ariz., who wants to see the tax disappear, has been trying to broker a compromise among Republicans and Democrats interested in paring down the tax. He said he was optimistic about chances for getting the bill on the agenda.

"It can succeed without an agreement, but it's better to have an agreement," he said.

Kyl began talking about a compromise after concluding that the GOP could not win a vote to repeal the tax.

His most recent idea would exempt the first $5 million of an individual's estate, or $10 million of a couple's, from taxation. Estates between $5 million and $30 million would be taxed at rates equal to capital gains, and the remainder would be taxed at 30 percent.

"For most people, they won't have to worry about the death tax anymore, and for the very few who do, it would only be the very most, the very largest estates, which would clearly have the financial means of doing something about it," he said.

Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., said he expected Kyl's plan will prove attractive to Republicans and Democrats. If not, he said, the estate tax could find its way into an unrelated bill headed for the president's desk sometime this year.

Democrats cool to the idea of reducing estate taxes said the compromise amounted to a virtual repeal at a time when the federal budget already faces annual deficits.

"It is unconscionable. It is unwise. It is reckless," said Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D. "And it will contribute to economic decline in this country."
