Colby Community College to host horsemanship clinic

Colby Community College will host a Natural Horsemanship Clinic Aug. 18-19 at the college farm east of Colby on U.S. Highway 24.

One of the world's best natural horsemen Pat Parelli will be conducting the round pen demonstration from 6:30-9:30 p.m. Aug. 18. The clinic is free for all Colby Community College students and 4-H members. A $25 fee will be charged for others who wish to attend the demonstration.

Ten participants will have the opportunity to ride in the clinic from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Aug. 19. Colby Community College students will be given priority. A $100 fee will be charged for the Saturday session for non Colby Community College students who wish to attend.

Born in California's Bay Area, Pat Parelli was obsessed with horses at an early age. When he was 13, horseman and trapper Freddie Ferrara of Livermore, Calif., recognized his talents with horses and took him under his wing. During the summers he would teach him lessons about how to be more natural with horses, dogs, cattle, and with nature itself.

At 17, Parelli launched himself into rodeos. A natural, Parelli won the Bareback Rookie of the Year title in 1972, his buck off average just 4 percent. Watching many rodeo athletes trying to move on, he was determined to find life after rodeo. A career in training horses seemed logical and he started a business that concentrated on starting colts.

However, like many trainers before him, it wasn't long before the normal pattern of both equine and financial frustration set in and Parelli found himself on the verge of getting out of horses altogether. This was not how he wanted to have to train horses, by processing them like inanimate objects.

Then three significant events changed his life. He met Tony Ernst from Australia who was not only a student of the horse but was a disciple of the Kung Fu martial arts and a master musician. He began to work under the tutelage of Troy Henry, a master horseman from Clovis, Calif., who specialized in training and developing both horse and rider for competition using psychology and communication. He took an interest in developing mules to be able to perform like horses.

Through Tony Ernst, Parelli learned about inner power and the Kung Fu principles of discipline, body control, and mind-body mastery.

Troy Henry opened up a whole new world to Parelli by helping him understand the horse's mental and emotional processes as a prey animal as well as the true dynamics of horsemanship and how they applied to performance horses.

The mules taught Parelli the importance of reverse psychology, the principle of safety and comfort as the only real incentives, and developed in him more understanding on how to get a prey animal to "want" to perform. They also taught him about patience. In 1980, he founded The American Mule Association.

Being an intense student of horses and horsemanship, Parelli developed his own style of teaching and expanding these principles. He also became interested in showing reined cow horses and was successful in reining and cutting events with both horses and mules.

One of the greatest frustrations he experienced in training horses was handing them back to their owners. He found if the rider didn't have enough savvy, the horses would regress. After much soul searching he finally decided he couldn't go on training horses to put up with their owner's lack of skills and understanding, instead, he had to find a way to help people become savvy with horses.

He soon discovered he had a natural talent in finding the right words to explain what he understood about horses.

So he turned his attention even more to helping people instead of training. He began to give "lessons" but had no idea that one day he would be able to help people on a much larger scale.

Parelli Natural Horsemanship has become one of the most exciting revolutions in horsemanship, attracting attention from all corners of the industry including the respected riding school, the Cadre Noir of Saumur in France.

Becoming one of the most popular ways to develop expertise with horses, Parelli's system is a completely non-denominational horsemanship program embracing both English and Western, from dressage to team penning, polo to cutting, jumping to racing, rodeos, shows, or for recreation.

In the event of inclement weather, the clinic will be held at Johnson Farms located north of Colby on Highway 25.
