Ice machines helping Louisiana fishermen

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — For fishermen, ice is a necessity. Without it on board, any fish caught would spoil.

Ice was hard to come by in the year since Hurricanes Katrina and Rita wrecked nearly every ice-house, dock and marina close to the Gulf of Mexico in southeast and southwest Louisiana.

Fishermen have had to drive hundreds of miles to load up on ice and other supplies they need to do their jobs. But they are getting a helping hand from the Shell Oil Co. and state agencies.

Officials on Wednesday dedicated an industrial ice-making machine in Chalmette, about nine miles south of New Orleans. The ice maker is one of three machines being put on line for fishermen with the help of a $500,000 donation from the oil company.

The machines' arrival coincides with the start of the fall white shrimp season — one of Louisiana's most precious sea harvests.

"You weathered quite a blow from Hurricanes Katrina and Rita," said Gov. Kathleen Blanco told industry representatives during a news conference. "Many of you lost your boats. The storms wiped out the ice houses and the infrastructure that supports you."

Blanco said the ice-making facilities "will allow you to expand your ability to harvest, transport and sell your shrimp and fish."

"Our fisheries communities are basically starting over and ice is one of the absolute necessities," said Ewell Smith, head of Louisiana Seafood Promotion and Marketing Board, which helped facilitate the deal with Shell.

Two of the machines will be placed in hard-hit St. Bernard Parish and the third one, which started cranking out the ice last week, is in Cameron Parish. Rita pummeled that parish with its storm surge and winds.

"Prior to that piece of equipment going in there was no ice for a hundred miles," Smith said.

"It's step one in trying to get some infrastructure back," said Pete Gerica, president of the Lake Pontchartrain Fishermen's Association. "We don't have any fuel docks, shrimp loading docks."

Gerica said Cameron fishermen told him it cost them $300 in fuel for $70 worth of ice.

"Everybody's riding around getting things by truck these days," he said. That adds more costs for fishermen already struggling to make ends meet as they deal with a continuing slump in prices due to imports and other pressures.

Some of the bigger fishing boats have gotten around the lack of ice by installing ice-making machines onboard their boats, Gerica said. But many of Louisiana's fishermen operate small vessels and don't have the capital to invest in the expensive equipment.

While the ice-making machines are good news for the industry, there are plenty of other problems.

Fishermen have been largely left out of federal rebuilding subsidies and the waterways remain clogged with debris, Gerica said.

The Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries estimates that up to 70 percent of the fleet is back on its feet, but many fishermen in the hardest-hit places are still fighting to get back in the race.

Rita and Katrina caused an estimated $1 billion in damages to the state's $2.3 billion commercial and recreational fishing industry.

Cosmosphere founder ordered by judge to pay restitution

WICHITA (AP) — The founder of the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center must pay $132,374 in restitution for stealing artifacts from NASA and the Hutchinson museum, a judge determined Thursday.

But Max Ary, who was sentenced in May to three years in prison, will be allowed to remain free pending appeal, U.S. District Judge J. Thomas Marten ruled.

"I have a lot of decisions to make — plans and logistics," Ary told reporters outside the courthouse.

Ary, 56, said he was pleased he was able to remain free pending appeal and that the judge reduced the amount of restitution sought by the government.

The U.S. attorney's office declined to comment.

Prosecutors had sought $233,762 in restitution from Ary, but questions arose over who owned some of the space artifacts, and the Cosmosphere had received at least some money for some NASA items Ary had sold. The defense had asked that Ary pay just $57,760 in restitution, reflecting the value of items he was convicted of stealing.

A jury convicted Ary in November on 12 counts, including theft of government property, wire and mail fraud, interstate transport of stolen goods and money laundering.

In making his ruling, Marten said he found credible Ary's claim that some of his own items were displayed at the Cosmosphere and that they were co-mingled with museum artifacts. Marten noted that Ary had a significant collection before coming to the Cosmosphere.

"We want to err on the side of fairness where that happens," Marten said. Citing uncertainty over the ownership of some items, such as film strips, Marten reduced the restitution amount sought by prosecutors by $79,387. He reduced it an additional $22,000 because the Cosmosphere received money for some NASA items Ary sold.

Ary was president and chief executive officer of the Cosmosphere from 1976 until he left in 2002 to become executive director of the Oklahoma City Omniplex.

He was convicted of stealing data recording tape from the Apollo 15 mission, an Air Force One control panel, spacesuit components, a lunar sample bag and personal items carried into space by astronauts.

The prison sentence Marten imposed in May was shorter than even the low end of federal sentencing guidelines, but Marten had noted that given Ary's age, his ability to make restitution would be diminished the longer he is incarcerated.

Ary acknowledged at trial that he sold artifacts that belonged to NASA and the Cosmosphere, but he maintained they had been accidentally mingled with items in his own collection, which he said was made up of items he obtained as gifts or through trades.

Ary left the Cosmosphere in May 2002, when he moved to Oklahoma City to become executive director of the Kirkpatrick Science and Air Space Museum at Omniplex. He was placed on leave from that job after being indicted in April and was replaced after his contract expired in August.
