the house all year, but especially during the holiday season.

Nothing is more attractive to your friendly feline or growing puppy than tinsel glittering in the air just a few feet above the floor. What a "jump and grab" challenge for a kitten. And don't forget the colorful attraction of Christmas lights, ornaments and other breakable ob-

Pets are like toddlers pretty much their entire lives. We often forget this as we decorate for the holidays.

Make sure decorations are secure and out of reach. You may not be able to save your pet from strangulation or suffocation if its windpipe is filled with tinsel. And don't forget that your kitten bleeds just like you do. We recommend plastic, thing that won't shatter.

Other dangers include mistletoe; it might get you a kiss from your best guy or gal, but make sure the branch is securely out of pets' reach. The same precautions apply to poinsettia plants and holly berries: The danger of these plants has sometimes been overstated, but you need to be careful.

Your pet could experience digestive irritation if it ingests them. If drooling, vomiting or diarrhea occur after the pet eats such plants, get the animal to the veterinarian right
