Art club celebrates Christmas

Members of Colby's High Plains Art Club traveled to Oberlin Dec. 12 for a Christmas luncheon in the Teller Room at the LandMark Inn. After the meal they had an unusual gift exchange.

Two months earlier each person drew two pieces of paper from a can. One piece instructed them on the type of painting they were to paint, the other told them of something unusual they were to have in the painting such as color or design. The paintings were to be small and wrapped as a gift. Numbers were drawn for the gifts and when each painting was opened, they had to guess who did the painting. The ladies had very little trouble identifying the style of each artist. They all agreed that this was a tradition they wanted to carry on through the years, because a painting by a friend is priceless.

They were treated to a tour of the inn by the proprietors and visited the gift shop there. After shopping at various antique shops in Oberlin they returned home.

The next meeting is to be on Tuesday, Jan. 9 at the Methodist Church at 10 a.m. After lunch a business meeting will be held and a program will be presented by Marj Brown. Margaret Denneler will be hostess.

Dairy goats gaining popularity across country

APPLETON, Wis. (AP) — Adam VanDen Bosch likes dairy farming, but not working with cows, so about four years ago he persuaded his father to switch the family dairy farm to one that milks goats.

"Goats have a lot more personality," VanDen Bosch, 23, said. "They are a lot easier to manage."

Goats are not exactly butting heads with cows for milk-producing supremacy in the state that bills itself as America's Dairyland. But more and more goat herds are grazing on a rural landscape that once was almost exclusively reserved for dairy cows. The state has only about 19,500 goats compared to 1.24 million dairy cows, according to the Wisconsin Agricultural Statistics Service, which surveyed the state's goat dairy industry in September. Still, the survey showed 42 percent of the goat farmers had been milking for less than five years, and 79 percent of them planned to increase the size of their herds during the next five years.

VanDen Bosch, whose family farms north of Appleton in eastern Wisconsin, said size played a role in the decision to choose goats over cows.
