Trojan wrestlers upset ranked team

The Colby Community College wrestling team defeated the number five ranked team nationally Thursday 24-13 over Lincoln College of Illinois.

One of the best matchups of the night featured Levi Younkin for Colby and Tol Calvin of Lincoln. Calvin defeated Younkin earlier this season at the Tournament of Champions in Colby, but Younkin exacted some revenge by defeating Calvin in his home arena.

The Trojan wrestlers compete today and Saturday in St. Louis at the Meramac duals.

Here are Colby's results from the duel with Lincoln

125 pounds: Akmal Adilov won by 3-0 decision.

133: Tyler Baker lost by fall

141: Levi Younkin won by 2-1 decision.

149: Lyubomir Kumbarov lost by 2-1 decision.

157: Cole Garcia won by 4-0 decision.

165: Taylor Finley lost 15-7 decision.

174: Scott Miller won 7-2 decision.

184: Chris Sutton-Kearn won by forfeit

197: Naota Saga won 4-2 decision.

Hwt.: Gabe Walz won 7-0 decision.

Huggins stands by no-show remarks

Kansas State coach Bob Huggins has no second thoughts over calling out students who stand in line to buy tickets to the Wildcats' games and don't show up.

And if the no-show trend continues, student fans could find themselves relegated to less desirable seats at Bramlage Coliseum.

"If you aren't going to use the tickets, let somebody else use them," Huggins said during a conference call Thursday. "That's what I was trying to say, and I don't regret that."

Athletic director Tim Weiser sympathizes with Huggins and said the athletic department could make changes in the seating chart if the student section remains unfilled.

"We'll have to evaluate the location of those seats, and if that's the best location for our students, if they don't use the seats they have," Weiser said.

The buzz generated by Huggins' hiring last spring sparked a run on student tickets, a rarity for the Wildcats in recent years.

But while Bramlage Coliseum's 4,600-seat student section sold out, keeping it filled has been another matter. And last week, after seeing about 2,500 empty student seats for the Wildcats' 69-60 victory over Baylor, Huggins vented his frustration in his post-game radio show.

"They want to come in and do this Huggieville thing, then fill it," Huggins said at the time. "I don't want my name associated with something that's half right."

The "Huggieville" tag, which appears on T-shirts and the Bramlage Coliseum video board, is a play on Huggins' name and the Aggieville bar district next to campus.

On Thursday, Huggins said some people took his remarks out of context.

"What I said was, 'If you're going to buy tickets,' and they bought all the tickets. We had to turn some students away," he said. "But if you're going to stand in line for hours to get tickets, why wouldn't you use them?"

Huggins also said he wasn't blaming the students for lower attendance at games over the winter break.

"I understand when students aren't in town, they're not going to drive back for the game," he said. "But if you're in town, why wouldn't you use the tickets?"

Weiser said he appreciated Huggins' candor and desire to see Bramlage packed to its capacity of 13,500.

"Bob has continued to be a guy, and this is one of the things that appeals to me, who speaks his mind," Weiser said. "I appreciate the fact that he has the same goals I do in terms of having our facility full."

Tom Gilbert, Kansas State's assistant sports information director, said there were about as many empty student seats at Monday's 73-36 nonconference rout of Chicago State.

"They were a lot louder, though, a lot more raucous," Gilbert said.

Kansas State, which has won four straight, is home again Saturday for a Big 12 game against Nebraska. Five home games remain after that, including a matchup against rival Kansas on Feb. 19.

"Obviously, we're going to wait until the end of the season before we draw any conclusion," Weiser said. "But we either need people to use their tickets, or to see that somebody does."
