This is a logic-based number placement puzzle. The goal is to enter a number, 1-9, in each cell in which each row, column and 3x3 region must contain only one instance of each numeral. The solution to today's Sudoku puzzle is below.

Repeating pattern with jealous men

Dear Dr. Brothers: I've been unusually successful in my career, for a woman in my late 20s. I couldn't ask for more in that area, but I'm a total failure with men, and I can't figure out why. I keep making the same mistakes, and now for the third time I've ended up with a guy who's insanely jealous -- ridiculously so. They're all sure I'm interested in another man, until eventually -- because of their attacks and jealous fits -- I actually am attracted to someone else. Fortunately, I've only married and divorced one of these guys, but I don't want to end up alone. How do I break this pattern? There must be some men who aren't pathologically jealous. -- P.T.

Dr. Joyce Brothers

- Ask Dr. Brothers

described yourself and this new love makes me think this would be a marriage that would be pushing the edge. Of course, anything is possible. You might change and find that you love the high-risk life, or he might suddenly decide he'd enjoy reading books he'd never had time to read or find that gardening fills all his needs for action. That's unlikely.

One reason is that there's more and more evidence that a desire for new and unusual experiences and risk-taking may be hard-wired into our temperament very early; we may be born with it. Don't do anything in haste, but take a long time to think about any long-term relationship. Enjoy, but don't take it too seriously. (c) 2008 by King Features Syndicate

The reason I raise these questions is because studies have shown that men with low self-esteem often become overly dependent and invested in their wife's career, and tend to become extremely jealous of other men taking over her life in some way. Could it be that you're subconsciously selecting such men? If so, ask yourself why, and try to find a man who's equally or more successful than you are and who's secure and self-confident.

Dear Dr. Brothers: I'm a small-town Southern girl, and I've always thought of myself as a kind of homebody -- quiet and content with my own simple patterns. In fact, I was seriously thinking of marrying a guy I grew up with, who's now a local banker. I still kind of love him, but three weeks ago on what I thought was going to be a quick visit with a cousin, I met a guy who's knocked me off my feet. I've never met anyone like him. He's so daring, he'll do anything. He's gone sky-diving, mountain climbing -- you name it. Most important, he's as serious about me as I am about him. Could marriage with him work? I'd like to try. -- F.F.

Dear F.F.: While it's true that opposites often attract, there's an issue of just HOW opposite before the odds against it may be too great. The way you've
