

Quiz topic: Love and relationships

Valentine's Day is upon us. Whether you'll be spending the day at a romantic getaway, getting pedicures with your girlfriends or curled up with hot cocoa and a good book, it's hard to escape the topic of relationships at this time of year. Romantic relationships can take many different forms, and love can be experienced in a variety of ways. You should remember to celebrate this exciting variety, because so often we pigeonhole Valentine's Day to apply only to those in storybook-perfect romances. Although the history of Valentine's Day and the saint it is attributed to are shrouded in mystery, February has always been a month devoted to romance. This quiz tests your knowledge of love and relationships.

1. A pheromone is any chemical produced by an organism that transmits a message to a member of the same species.
TRUE () FALSE ()

2. Women ages 16-24 experience higher rates of domestic violence than any other age group.
TRUE () FALSE ()

3. Kissing for one minute burns approximately 10 calories.
TRUE () FALSE ()

4. The average number of times Italian people have sex per year is the highest in all of Europe.
TRUE () FALSE ()

5. How well a couple does during the newlywed years of their marriage does not predict whether the marriage will last.
TRUE () FALSE ()

6. According to psychologist Robert Sternberg's triangular theory of love, love is composed of intimacy, commitment and passion.
TRUE () FALSE ()

7. Brain scans of people experiencing feelings of love show remarkable similarities to scans of people with mental illness.
TRUE () FALSE ()

3. FALSE. Kissing actually burns up to 26 calories per minute! Sex can actually be considered part of your exercise routine, as it burns calories at a similar rate to brisk walking.

4. FALSE. French people report having sex an average of 130 times per year, which is the highest in all of Europe. This includes both single and married people, although the married men reported having sex more often than the single men.

5. FALSE. What happens in a marriage within the first two years can predict whether the marriage will succeed or fail in the long run. Much of the time, the reason marriage fails within these early years is not due to conflict, but due to loss of positive emotions in the relationship. Because of this, one of the most important parts of a marriage is not dealing with the fallout of occasional fights or even normal day-to-day bickering, but maintaining the passion and excitement that each person felt at the beginning of the relationship.

6. TRUE. Robert Sternberg, former president of the American Psychological Association, developed this theory, which argues that different types of love can be characterized by different combinations of these three feelings within a relationship. Intimacy between two people can be thought of as the sharing of personal details about their lives. Commitment is the expectation that the relationship, whatever its form, will last forever. Passion is the feeling of physical attraction that is common ly felt during infatuation and romantic love.

7. TRUE. The feeling of love causes activity in the same areas of the brain as feeling hungry or thirsty, or feeling cravings for a drug. Over time, though, different areas of the brain are stimulated, suggesting that our feelings of love change as a relationship progresses. Brain-activity studies, using functional MRI scans, can tell us a lot about what areas of the brain are activated during different activities.
