A Charger to Find
Dear Heloise: How many times have you hooked up your CELL PHONE to its charger, only to go out the door without it? Ever charge up your digital camera battery for a special event, get there with the camera and sadly find out that the battery is sitting at home on the counter ... still charging?

I've come up with an easy way to avoid that happening ever again. As soon as I hook up anything to its charger, I put my car keys next to it. It really helps to keep my purse somewhat near the chargers. You can't leave home without either item ever again -- it works 100 percent! -- Lynda White, El Dorado Hills, Calif.

Lynda, how right you are! How many travelers have left a charger and battery in a hotel room? To avoid this, I put something (like a hand towel) out of place, even hanging it on the inside doorknob or security chain. -- Heloise

FAST FACTS
Dear Readers: Have a bunch of old key chains? Here are some hints for using them:

* Put on a ceiling fan or light pull for easy accessibility.

* Use separate ones to ID different keys (e.g., shed, lawn mower, etc.).

* Use as a zipper pull on coats, purses, backpacks, suitcases, etc.

LIPSTICK CONTAINER
Dear Heloise: I would like to share a recycle tip. When I run out of lipstick, I clean the container the lipstick came in and dry it thoroughly. I place a small amount of cotton from a cotton ball inside and place a couple of needles inside the lipstick container. I can then carry extra needles with me as I do my hand sewing. -- Anna Victoria Reich, Stafford, Va.

BROKEN SHREDDER
Dear Heloise: The paper container of an old, broken paper shredder makes a fine container in which to soak a sprained ankle. The size is perfect for a foot.
