How good of a friend are you?

Dr. Joyce Brothers

• Ask Dr. Brothers

How do you do in the friendship department? How important is it, or should it be? Can you sometimes do too much, give too much support? How honest should you be? Here's a chance to check up on yourself.

1. Because of the close bond small children have with their parents and families, preschool friendships aren't so important.

True () False ()
2. The loner who never socializes, never misses it and has no real friends is usually just as mentally and physically healthy as those who are more gregarious.

True () False ()
3. Friendship has exactly the same meaning and the same function for little boys as it does for little girls.

True () False ()
4. Parents should look inward, at themselves, before trying to break up or control their child's friendship.

True () False ()
5. One should always be totally honest with a friend.

True () False ()
6. As long as someone has truly good friends who generally share his views, that's all he needs for a healthy social life.

True () False ()
7. If it's a true friend, it's OK to have unrealistic expectations and still expect to keep that friend.

True () False ()
8. There's no such thing as a toxic friendship, and good friendships can never turn toxic.

True () False ()
Answers

1. False. Children gain a great deal in many ways from having playmates and friends their own age before they're 5 or 6, no matter how close they are to their parents. They pick up social skills and start learning about empathy.

2. False. Loners tend to be much more neurotic, emotionally troubled and have more physical problems than do those who have a more normal social life. They also have a shorter life span.

3. False. Little girls seek and usually develop more intimate relationships, whereas boys are more apt to expect more physical testing and play, and gaining status, or one-upmanship, is more important to them than is intimacy.

4. True. It's important, before a parent interferes with the child's choice of friends, that the adult isn't doing so because of some bias or prejudice of his own, having nothing to do with the child's welfare.

5. False. Studies have revealed that usually, even when a friend asks for personal advice, she's already made up her own mind. Total honesty can cause pain as well as bring doom to an otherwise good friendship.

6. False. We often have more to learn from having friendships with people who are diverse and hold totally different views. Having only friends who think as we do limits our chance to grow and develop.

7. False. There are limits to every friendship, no matter how close, and one of the most frequent reasons for breakups of friendships is due to one person overstepping boundary lines, asking for or expecting too much.

8. False. It's a myth to believe that good friendships will always last forever. Part of this may be due to changing values and goals. Some friendships can and do last forever, but as in marriages, some need time out, or if the relationship is really toxic, a divorce.

If you answered six of these eight questions correctly, you're better informed than most on this subject.
