Watch for clothes 'dry clean only'

By Heloise

Hints from Heloise

What the Label Means

Dear Readers: Have you ever wondered what "DRY CLEAN ONLY" means on garment care labels when there are no other instructions? According to our friends at the Drycleaning and Laundry Institute, the Federal Trade Commission's Care Labeling Rule is based on a warning system. If warnings are not listed, it means that the harshest process under the listed care procedure can be used safely. "Dry clean" or "dry clean only" means any acceptable solvent and the standard dry-cleaning method can be used. If the fabric or attached trim requires special care, the label must state so and have instructions. So now you know. Also be sure to read care labels before buying a garment! -- Heloise

GARAGE SALE

Dear Heloise: I wanted to let you know about a garage-sale trick I used that everyone loved. I took a sheet of poster board and paired my earrings up on it by sticking the posts through. When someone bought a pair, I would simply cut them off. This way, they stayed together and one didn't get lost while people continued to shop. I also attached bracelets and necklaces with pins. -- Shirley, via e-mail

SUMMER SALADS

Dear Heloise: Here's an additional suggestion to make your summer salads (chicken, egg, etc.) a little healthier: Substitute nonfat plain yogurt for a bunch of the mayonnaise. I usually go about half and find no noticeable difference in flavor. You can experiment with this and find the amount that satisfies you. Since the mayonnaise is usually just for moistening anyway, yogurt will do that job nicely, with a lot less fat. -- Carol, via e-mail

Carol, I do something similar. I use some fat-free or low-fat sour cream in the same way. -- Heloise

LIPSTICK HINT

Dear Heloise: I like to coordinate my lipstick and nail-polish colors with my attire. I find it bothersome to have a number of lipstick tubes; they take up too much space, and finding the color I want is a nuisance. I have solved it this way:

I have a clear-plastic pillbox (seven days), and when I purchase a color, I empty the tube into a section. Since it is clear, I can see the colors and choose the one I like. I use a lipstick brush and apply it with that. Then I load the brush with lipstick and put it in my bag, and I know I have the matching color. I also have an extra brush (different color) that remains at home. -- Harriet K. Meltzer, Delray Beach, Fla.

LEFTOVER TOOTHPASTE

Dear Heloise: After years of struggling to use all the toothpaste in the tube, I suddenly realized that the little, pretty sample jars of creams were now clean and waiting for something -- my dregs of toothpaste. Believe me, it is terrific to open a small jar with much more toothpaste in it than one realizes. I would normally have thrown the unobtainable toothpaste, in irritation, in the trash. -- Barbara Overal, Allen, Texas

California strawberries make it to Olympic China

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — With one food preference survey, China's Olympic athletes accomplished something the California Strawberry Commission and Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger had been trying to achieve for years: getting U.S.-grown supplies of the fruit into communist China.

The first 450-pound supply of American strawberries ever exported legally to China arrived in Beijing on Wednesday after members of the Chinese Olympic team listed strawberries as the No. 3 fruit they would like to eat during the Summer Games starting Friday.

Since China's short strawberry season ends in late spring, Chinese officials looked for help from California, where strawberries grow year-round.

Chinese inspectors spent 12 hours going over 50 trays of berries before allowing them to proceed to the Olympic Village, said Mary DeGroat of the California Strawberry Commission.

"It truly is a historic moment for us," DeGroat said moments after the industry group's executive director called to say the shipment was accepted.

Much of the chosen fruit came from a one-acre patch in Watsonville that company officials and picking crews from California Giant Berry Farms combed on Saturday looking for picture-perfect berries to include in the debut export. The company, along with neighboring Driscoll's berries, split the job of filling the order.

"We told the crews to make them look nice," said Jerry Moran, a Cal-Giant bush berry manager. "They took a little more time collecting the right fruit, picking the right size, the right color and berries with good shape."

After the strawberries were placed in plastic clamshells and stacked in the company's signature cardboard boxes with giant red berries printed on the side, Chinese officials required one extra touch: a label reading "Export to the People's Republic of China."

The berries were trucked to Los Angeles International Airport for the 14-hour flight to Beijing. To keep them cool on the commercial flight, the pallets of berries were wrapped in thermal insulation blankets.

"The time period is not so much different as it would be shipping from here to Chicago," said Cindy Jewell, director of marketing for Cal-Giant. "We wanted to make sure they stayed cool so they would arrive in the best possible quality."
