The book featured by the sunflower state is a book on Kansas wildflowers and grasses, and it's written by an author from rural Kansas.

Mike Haddock is the author of the book Wildflowers and Grasses of Kansas - A Field Guide. Mike grew up in Beloit. His father, Dean is a former ag teacher and one of the first bank agricultural representatives in the state of Kansas.

The Haddocks had a 2,200 acre farm near the rural community of Minneapolis, Kansas, population 2,061 people. Now, that's rural.

Mike says, "As a kid, I went with my dad to check cattle in the pastures. He would point out plants as we went and talk about how to identify them and what they were for.'

as ag librarian in 1989.

Currently he is Chair of the Sciences Department for K-State Libraries.

As a Kansas ag librarian in the The National Book Festival mid-1990s, Mike started catalogu-Kansas plants. He decided to create a web site covering wildflower and grass species found in Kansas. Mike started taking pictures at the Konza Prairie Biological Research Station near Manhattan and then the Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve in Chase County. Before long he had covered the whole state and had sample photos of hundreds of species on the web site.

> One day in 2002, Mike was attending a pasture management tour with Dr. Walter Fick, a range management professor at K-State. Walt told Mike that the web site was great and he used it all the time, but he couldn't lug his computer out into the field to access it. Walt said, "Have you ever thought about doing a book?"

That was the beginning. Mike developed a proposal for a book with photos and descriptions of Kansas plants, and that proposal When Mike's father had him was eventually accepted by the were all digital.

The publisher estimated that the first printing would last nine years, but in only three years they are already talking about reprinting.

This work was named a Kansas Notable Book in 2006. It is available from local bookstores as well as Barnes and Noble and Amazon.

Meanwhile, Mike has continued to refine and expand the web site. That site, which began with 40 species of flowers in the first year, now includes 552 species and nearly 2,700 photos. The web address is www.kswildflower.org. Mike says, "I've developed a deep love for the varied landscapes of our state."

It's time to leave the National Book Festival in Washington, D.C., where this book on wildflowers and grasses has been featured. We salute Mike Haddock for making a difference with this tremendous, pioneering reference work. His book can help anyone in rural Kansas stop and appreciate the flowers along the way.

The mission of the Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development is to enhance rural development by helping rural people help themselves. The Kansas Profile radio series and columns are produced with assistance from the K-State Research and Extension Department of Communications News Unit. # Embarrassed by loud mom; worried mom afraid of being too clingy

Dear Dr. Brothers: Some would call her quite the character, but in my view she's truly obnoxious. She's my mom, and she's been driving me batty! She is (and always has been) vulgar, loud and nasty. Now that I'm a grown woman -- I am out of college now and have a good job -- I really don't want anything else to do with her. Most of my work friends talk about having regular, nice parents, and I can't imagine inviting them to meet her, much less a date or future husband. Am I too cold about this? -- C.K.

Dear C.K.: I'm curious. When you say that you're out of college now and that you "don't want anything else to do with" your mom, it implies that you had some use for her in the past. Perhaps she came in quite handy when tuition and room and board were needed, and maybe earlier on in your childhood when she clothed and fed you?

My point is simple. Parents -- and families -- are not disposable products that we discard by the wayside when we no longer need their financial or emotional support. A relationship with a parent does not come with an expiration date -- it's a lifetime bond that goes through various changes. You seem to be relating to your mother on more of a childhood level than on an adult level, and that's something only you can change. If you feel your mother's behavior is obnoxious and rude, you need to discuss rence.

Dr. Joyce Brothers

Ask Dr. Brothers

it with her, like you would any adult. Stop casting yourself in the role of the embarrassed daughter. Most likely, your mom doesn't know she comes across as vulgar and rude; in her eyes, she's probably just having some fun. It's possible you are more concerned about the judgment of your friends than the feelings of your mother.

Dear Dr. Brothers: There's no doubt about it. I'm an excessive worrier. I would describe myself as a "worry wart," but that seems to be an understatement -- I'm more of a "worry tumor." Before I got pregnant, I didn't think I could handle having kids because I worry so much. I was afraid they would turn out like me -- fearful and clingy. But I had a child anyway, and -- surprise, surprise - I am now afraid to let her go to nursery school, which is only five minutes away. She is not clingy (yet), but I am terrified of leaving her there for two hours, three times a week. What should I do? - H.V.

Dear H.V.: There's an old Zen parable where a master instructs his student not to think of a monkey. Of course, the first image that pops into the apprentice's head is that of a smiling chimp. The point is, sometimes the more we try not to do something, the more difficult we make it for ourselves to actually achieve our goal.

But besides trying to detach yourself from your excessive tendency to worry, you also need to let go of some control. As much as you want no harm to come to your child, there's no possible way for you to monitor her 24 hours a day. You need to come to realize that as a mother, life and the real world are not under your jurisdiction. Your child will suffer bumps and bruises along the way, along with every child her age. She will experience both the joys and the disappointments that make up any childhood, and though you tell yourself differently, there's really nothing you can do about it. Don't confuse your excessive worry with your love for your child, and you'll be just fine. Give yourself and your child permission to grow, and realize that things will get easier.
