Sunflower Bank president on list of most powerful bankers

er's 25 Most Powerful Women in Banking, an annual list compiled by one of the financial industry's leading maga-

Carter has let the bank since 2005, and been a member of the bank's board since 1995. US Banker unveiled list in its October issue. The magazine typically con-for its nomination process. It will recognize the 25 honorees with New York

Mollie Carter

The list, in its sixth year, pays tribute to influential women in finance "whose professional and personal achievements leave their mark on corporate America and push the boundaries of what's possible in their businesses."

Candidates are selected and ranked by overall performance – including overall influence on the institution, the industry and the community. US Banker also considers an individual's leadership skills, financial performance, job complexity, contribution to the institution's revenue and earnings, product and service innovations, communities each year community involvement and reinvestment, corporate governance, ethics, management style and edu-

> Carter owns Sunflower with five siblings, sons and daughters of H.D. "Joe" Hale and Joyce Vanier Hale. Founded in 1892, Sunflower Bank now has assets from 35 locations in Kansas and Colorado. Through Carter's four-year tenure, the bank siders more than 4,700 executives grew from $1 billion in assets to its current $1.6 billion. Sunflower Bank remains well capitalized and a celebration later this month in largely unaffected by recent loan problems that have hurt many in

> Carter's leadership is captured in the bank's corporate mission statement: "Bringing out the best in the lives we touch ... Creating Possibility," a nontraditional vision for a financial institution. Sunflower employees are challenged with the responsibility to impact the lives of each other, customers and communities in a positive way. Sunflower Bank cultivates an environment of volunteerism, which results in employees accounting for more than 20,000 volunteer hours in their
