Jayhawks, Tigers renew Arrowhead deal

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas and Missouri, whose rivalry is the oldest west of the Mississippi, have agreed to play their annual game in Kansas City's Arrowhead Stadium through 2012.

The announcement was made Thursday by the schools, the Kansas City Chiefs and the Kansas City Sports Commission.

Playing the game in Kansas City began in 2007 with a two-year deal. This year's game is scheduled for Saturday.

Kansas will host the games in 2009 and 2011 and Missouri will host in 2010 and 2012.

Last year's game was played after an intense buildup with national championship implications as No. 4 Missouri beat the No. 2 Jayhawks 36-28 for the Big 12 North title in front of 80,537, the second-biggest crowd in Arrowhead history.

It turned out to be Kansas' only loss in a 12-1 year while the Tigers subsequently lost to Oklahoma in the Big 12 championship game.

This year, the Tigers have already wrapped up the Big 12 North championship before hosting Kansas in the 117th renewal of the rivalry.

"This agreement enables the University of Kansas to bring a game to the back yard of its largest alumni base," said Kansas athletic director Lew Perkins. "It is an outstanding opportunity to showcase this great rivalry on a terrific national stage. In addition, it gives our players the experience of competing in one of the NFL's premier stadiums - an experience they will never forget."

Mike Alden, Missouri's athletic director, said the game will help bring exposure to the rivalry.

Adding to the attractiveness of the game for Kansas and Missouri fans will be the $325 million renovation which Arrowhead is undergoing.

Moving the game off campus has been opposed by merchants in Lawrence and Columbia, Mo., who depend on game day revenue. But the schools stand to gain from the increased gate at Arrowhead.
