

Taxes, Kansas politics featured at library this week

The Pioneer Memorial Library always has a lot going on. Just last week we received federal and state tax forms and instructions for 2008.

If you need a tax form other than the normal ones, please go to our website at colbylibrary.com, scroll over to the far right side of the screen, and at the top you will see an icon with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) logo in blue and white.

Click on the icon and you will automatically go the IRS site. Once there, on the right hand side of the page, you will find a description of "most requested forms and publications."

If those are not the forms you need, right below is a link to "more forms and publications." If you cannot find what you need on that page, go up to the right corner of the page, look for the magnifying glass symbol and the box right next to it. Type in the form you need. You will probably be linked quickly to the exact form.

I have also added to our website a link to the Kansas Department of Revenue "forms and publications for individual income" page. Business owners can find help and resources at www.ksrevenue.org/business.htm, or go to our "business section" under quick links, and there you can click on the Kansas Revenue logo. This link takes you to the tax area for businesses.

Another activity that will soon begin will be free tax consulting for low-income people. Alvin Volk, a trained tax volunteer, will be once again available to help from 1 to 3 p.m. each Wednesday, beginning Feb. 4. You can meet him in the meeting room. No appointment is necessary, but you may have to wait if others are ahead of you.

If you are still considering you goals for this year, you might enjoy breezing through another new book available in the library, "If I Only Knew Then ... Learning From Our Mistakes," compiled by Charles Grodin. This book is 219 pages of celebrities discussing the mistakes they have made in their lives.

Don Hewitt clearly writes in his two-page discussion how he turned down Barbara Walters and Marty Ehrlichman for jobs. Famous people share their insights, including Carol Burnett, Goldie Hawn, Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Suzyn Waldman, Nancy Grace, Paul Newman, Robert Redford, Dr. Phil Miller, Sen. John Burton and many more.

Recently we were given the book "Every Woman's Desire," by Stephen Arterburn and Fred Stoeker. While it was on my desk, my husband looked at it and said, "Is this a training manual?" I thought that was extremely funny.

I went on to explain that I intended to write about it in this week's Library Link. What this book is about is not just what women desire, but how men view their role, the need to examine their relationship with their spouse, and ways to embrace who she is as a person. The authors both give vibrant stories of their failures and successes.

This book is about submitting to and caring for each other. I found that the questions written in the section "A Husband's Leadership Evaluation" were challenging for me to consider as a wife as well: "Your evaluation of our oneness.... Your evaluation of my spiritual leadership.... Your evaluation of my heart's softness.... Your evaluation of me as a servant (pp. 77-79)." And lest men think I'm foisting this book off on them only, ladies, please read the last chapter written by Brenda Stoeker, the wife of Fred Stoeker.

Another new book is "The Sunflower Sinner: An Odyssey of Politics and Passion," by Cynthia Dennis. Dennis is the oldest daughter of Paul Lackie, who was once elected chairman of the Young Republicans of Kansas. He thought he had a chance to become governor, but his relationship with Gov. Fred Hall and his decision to parole the abortionist Annas Brown, brought an end to his political fortunes and career.

To compile this work, Cynthia Dennis used trial transcripts, newspaper stories, speeches and other documents, as well as input from experts and researchers from the National Archives, the Kansas State Historical Society, Hutchinson Library and even Kansas judges. She hopes to make the truth prevail because she believes that "if we choose to deny our personal histories, we opt to hide the essence of who we are."

Beginning at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, the library will be making a new activity available for the middle-school youths during Ad Lib at Da Library. We intend to have the new Wii game system ready to use! Put it on your calendar.

Privacy an issue in abortion cases

By John Hanna
Associated Press Writer

OLATHE — As Phill Kline leaves office, he's still tangled in a heated public debate about whether his investigations of abortion clinics endangered their patients' privacy.

Criminal cases are pending against the state's two biggest abortion clinics, Dr. George Tiller's in Wichita and Planned Parenthood's in Overland Park. Kline is tied to both, and in each, patients' medical records are key evidence.

Kline, an anti-abortion Republican, began investigating the clinics while serving as Kansas attorney general in 2003-07. He lost his re-election bid in 2006 but was appointed Johnson County district attorney, where he continued his efforts before losing last year's Republican primary.

His successor as attorney general, an abortion rights Democrat, filed 19 misdemeanor charges in Sedgewick County against Tiller in June 2007, relying significantly on Kline's evidence. Tiller denies the allegations of failing to obtain a second opinion on late-term abortions from an independent physician, as required by Kansas law.

Kline filed 107 charges in Johnson County against Planned Parenthood's clinic in October 2007, alleging it falsified documents and performed illegal late-term abortions, which it denies. He's even said in court there's evidence of a potential conspiracy between the two clinics to perform illegal late-term procedures, though that's not a part of his case.

In both cases, defense attorneys portray Kline as a zealot who's improperly used his power in hopes of closing the clinics. They also say they worry he'll disseminate patients' sensitive information.

"This is not the type of prosecutor that we are accustomed to working with," said Pedro Irigonegaray, a Topeka attorney representing the Planned Parenthood clinic. "I've been practicing law for 35 years. Never have I experienced anyone like Mr. Kline."

Abortion opponents acknowledge Kline is more tenacious than other officials would have been in pursuing potential wrongdoing. But they contend the clinics make patient privacy an issue only to demonize Kline and thwart any prosecution, noting that Kline's copies of the records were edited to remove names and other data.

"There's absolutely no identifying information," said Mary Kay Culp, executive director of the anti-abortion group Kansans for Life. "The privacy concerns are totally bogus at this point."

The clinics have continued to raise the issue in court. In Sedgewick County, Tiller's attorneys hope to get evidence suppressed or the charges dismissed, and they questioned Kline last week during a pretrial hearing.

In Johnson County, also last week, Kline was forced to answer a subpoena from Planned Parenthood's attorneys. He told a judge under oath that he has no records, copies, summaries or notes in his personal possession and doesn't intend to take any with him when he leaves office.

Kline has had little to say outside the courtroom and declined comment when contacted. But during the Sedgewick County hearing, he said: "We have not jeopardized patient privacy."

When Kline was attorney general, his investigation of the clinics was supervised by Shawnee County District Judge Richard Anderson, who subpoenaed patients' medical records at Kline's request. The subpoenas were issued in 2004, but a lengthy legal battle prevented Kline from gaining access to the records for more than two years.

In Sedgewick County last week, Dan Monnat, a Tiller attorney, made much of how Kline originally sought to have the clinics turn over unedited records.

Kline noted the records would have gone to Anderson first — and the judge would have edited them. Later, because of a Kansas Supreme Court order, the clinics were allowed to edit the records before giving them to Anderson.

Monnat continued to press: In 2004, documents show, Kline obtained a search warrant, and his chief investigator drew up a plan to raid Tiller's clinic, seize medical records and bring them directly to the attorney general's office. Kline pointed out that the warrant never was executed because he opted to seek subpoenas instead.

"There were several, multiple investigatory plans that were pursued," Kline testified.

Kline obtained edited records from the files of 62 Tiller patients and 29 Planned Parenthood patients in late October 2006, two weeks before he lost the attorney general's race. Just before he left that job, he had copies — of both the Tiller and Planned Parenthood records — transferred to Johnson County, where they'd be waiting when he took over.

In April 2007, in Shawnee County, Anderson ordered Kline to turn over his copies of the Tiller records. In theory, Kline, as Johnson County district attorney, had no jurisdiction to prosecute Tiller in Sedgewick County.

But Kline testified last week in Sedgewick County: "There was evidence we had of a potential conspiracy between Planned Parenthood and Dr. Tiller."

The two clinics sometimes refer patients to each other, but attorneys for both said there's been no wrongdoing because of that.

"There's been no conspiracy," said Peter Brownlie, chief executive officer of Planned Parenthood of Kansas and Mid-Missouri. "I don't even know where that allegation comes from."
