Fun at the Super Bowl party

VERA SLOAN/Colby Free Press

A teen tried his hand at an air hockey table Sunday evening at the Rock while he waited for the last half of the Superbowl to begin. A party at the center, sponsored by the College Drive Assembly of God Church, drew about 50 people for the big game.

Workshop offered at universities to teach students consumer threats

In an effort to educate young people about consumer threats, my office is hosting two student consumer workshops for Kansas high school students during National Consumer Protection Week in early March. The workshops are free and will educate students about consumer issues before they head out on their own to make important financial decisions.

The first workshops of this kind hosted by the Attorney General's Office – one at the University of Kansas and one at Kansas State University - will focus on teaching students financial skills to suc- credit throughout their adult life. ceed in life.

It is important that our teenagers learn the ins and outs of being a smart consumer early. These workshops will help students be better equipped to make important financial choices, protect their identities, and maintain good Students in this age group con-

Each workshop will consist of mulpresentations tiple from public speakers, including myself. The topics will include: the ABC's of personal finance, Contracts: a foreign language, Student Loan Practices, Protecting your Identity and other issues affecting today's students.

Consumer protection is a priority for my office. I encourage students to join me for this learning opportunity. I also encourage teachers and school officials to share this opportunity with their students. By teaching students more about financial literacy early, we can protect their credit in the future.

The free workshops will be held at KU on March 3rd and at KSU on March 6th and include complimentary lunch. Information on the workshops has been disseminated to all high schools across the state. Registration information is also available online at www.ksag.org.

Public television manager to retire

BUNKER HILL - Jack O'Leary, chairman of the board of Smoky Hills Public Television, announced that Lawrence Holden will retire as general manager and chief executive officer at the end of March.

Holden has led the station since 2004

"Larry has led Smoky Hills through the completion of the digital transition," O'Leary said. "He oversaw the construction of KWKS-DT, a new full-power digital transmitter facility for northwest Kansas.

"He rejuvenated the production of Kansas programs and initiated a major giving program which has boosted community support. On behalf of the board, I'd like to thank him for his efforts at Smoky Hills to make Kansas a better place to live and work.'

Before coming to Kansas, Holden served as a station manager and general manager at public television and radio stations in California, as well as management posts in public media in Rhode Island, New Jersey, Mississippi, Kentucky and Pennsylvania.

He has been chair of the Kansas Public Broadcasting Council for the past two years.

"Bunker Hill is the smallest city in the U.S. with a public television station in it, but you wouldn't know it from the quality and quantity of television we've produced," Holden said. "I've enjoyed working with a talented and creative group of people who are devoted to Kansas and public television."

The board will institute a search for a new general manager, O'Leary said.
